Inform Congress United Nations' Needs for Victory Must Be Met

The Die Is Cast

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

The Army high command yesterday put Congress on notice that many fathers must be drafted in order to meet "target dates" and fulfill without costly loss of lives, time and money, United Nations grand strategy for winning the war.

Undersecretary of War Robert P. Patterson and Lieut. Gen. Joseph T. McNarney, Army deputy chief of staff, warned a Senate committee the high command has "gone the limit" in trimming Army strength to 7,700,000 men at the end of 1943. This is a slash of more than half a million in original goals.

Virtually Offset by Navy

Navy figures were not presented, but in another informed manpower quarter it was indicated that planned Navy increases will nearly offset the Army cut, bringing the over-all strength of the armed forces at year's end to about 10,700,000 men. This would mean a tentative net reduction of Army and Navy manpower goals of only about 100,000 men at the end of this year.

Admiral E. J. King, chief of naval operations, backed up Army testimony that troop goals must be met, in a statement delivered to the committee by a naval aide.

The troop bases for all armed services for the calendar year 1943 as finally recommended by the joint chiefs of staff and approved by the President are essential to the successful prosecution of the war," King said.

Serious Detriment

"There can be no lowering of the numbers of men to be furnished the armed services without serious detriment not only to planned operations but to operations that are now under way or in process of mounting."

King said 1944 troop base figures are under continuing study by the joint chiefs of staff and there will necessarily be some increase in the numbers required for that year over 1943."

Grave Responsibility

Earlier, at an open committee hearing, McNarney warned that "whoever" initiates a change in high command troop estimates "must assume the grave responsibility of ignoring the considered judgment of our military leaders arrived at after careful and prolonged study."

"If we don't get the men, we can't meet target dates," he testified under questioning. "Every single day we delay meeting target dates we prolong the war and increase the cost in men and money."

To raise the Army's strength to 7,700,000 by the end of 1943, and Branding "this foolish, childish overoptimism and overconfidence" as criminal, Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau last night, grimly disclosed for the first time that losses in materiel ranged up to 54 per cent in the conquest of Sicily.

Declaring before a massed crowd at the "Back the Attack" show on the Washington Monument Grounds that the current situation was critical, Secretary Morgenthau warned the attack in Italy "is the beginning of the war so far as the United States is concerned."

He said that the 15-billion-dollar War Loan would not be the last.

Detailing the costs of the Sicilian invasion, Morgenthau explained: "I'm not talking about Italy—I'm talking about Sicily."

In Sicily, he said, we met only a small fraction of the opposition we are getting from the Germans now in Italy.

"Sicily was merely an outpost of the fortress of Europe, very lightly defended. Listen to what it cost us:

"We lost 36 per cent of the motor carriages of our 75-mm guns.

"We lost 22 per cent of the carriages for our 105-mm howitzers.

"We lost 54 per cent of the carriages for 37-mm guns. All this in a minor campaign that lasted one month.

"We lost 7 per cent of our light tanks, 8 per cent of our medium tanks.

"We lost nearly 13 per cent of our 37-mm guns."

The thousands in the audience remained silent—almost breathless—as the Secretary continued:

District Committee To Ask Action on Food, Filth Charges

The Senate District Committee yesterday voted unanimously to request the United States Public Health Service to investigate charges of inadequate food and insanitary conditions at Gallinger Municipal Hospital.

The amended resolution has yet to be accepted by the Senate, which adjourned yesterday until tomorrow, but Chairman McCarran revealed yesterday afternoon that he had received assurances from a Public Health Service spokesman that the agency would give full cooperation.

McCarran also declared that he will meet with Public Health authorities today for a conference on the situation at Gallinger.

House Will Get Postwar Resolution

Measure to Put Congress on Record Comes Up Monday

By Mary Spargo
Post Staff Writer

The House will be asked to vote Monday on the Fulbright resolution putting Congress on record in favor of international machinery with power to maintain peace, the House Foreign Affairs Committee revealed yesterday.

At the same time Chairman Connally (Democrat) of Texas of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee urged that the United States take a leading part in forming a postwar organization of sovereign nations with a definite quota each of military might to enforce peace. A Senate resolution, however, may be many weeks in the distance, Connally indicated.

House leaders on both sides predicted that the House would give overwhelming approval to the Fulbright resolution. Decision to call up the measure in the House came after a conference attended by Speaker Rayburn (Democrat) of Texas, Majority Leader McCormack (Democrat) of Massachusetts and Minority Leader Martin (Republican) of Massachusetts.

Under Rules Suspension

The resolution will be called up under suspension of the rules, a procedure that prevents amendments, and calls for a two-thirds vote to adopt.

Readiness of the Republicans to have the resolution brought up at this time was attributed to the adoption of a Republican foreign policy plan at Mackinac Island, Mich., which many regarded as not far away from Fulbright's resolution.

If passed by the House the resolution, which is concurrent, will go to the Senate, where it will be referred to the Foreign Relations Committee.

Connally indicated, however, that he was drafting a resolution which would express his committee's views. He said that the structure of any international peace organization should be formed at the beginning, anyway, by the fighting members of the United Nations.

Representative Sol Bloom's View

Chairman Bloom (Democrat) of New York, of the House Foreign Affairs Committee declared that he believed the Foreign Affairs and Foreign Relations Committee should sit down together and jointly thresh out a resolution so that it could go before friend and enemy alike as the expression of the intent of Congress.

Manpower Report Publication Urged

By the Associated Press

Senator Vandenberg (Republican) of Michigan, called yesterday for the publication of a report on West Coast manpower problems he said had been prepared under the direction of Bernard Baruch.

"I know of no reason why such a report should be suppressed," Vandenberg told the Senate.

The new set of coupons is expected to last three years, if necessary, an OPA spokesman said yesterday.

"Congress is entitled to the benefit of any study by Mr. Baruch dealing with the manpower problem."

Red Army Now Only 73 Miles From Capital Of the Ukraine

By James M. Long
Associated Press Staff Writer

London, Sept. 15.—Nezhin, outer bastion of Kiev, fell today after 48 hours of fierce assault by crack Russian guard troops who had driven 200 miles in 40 days to within 73 miles of the capital of the Ukraine and within 50 miles of the vulnerable middle Dnieper.

Premier Marshal Josef Stalin announced the city's capture in another of a series of triumphant broadcast orders of the day, in which he described Nezhin as the "most important center of the Germans' defense on the road to Kiev." The broadcast was heard here by the Soviet monitor.

At the same time other Russian forces were reported to have battled their way forward in a flanking onslaught which captured Dyatkovo, 20 miles due north of Bryansk, where the Red army apparently was heavily engaged in establishing a bridgehead along the west bank of the Desna River.

Reds Don't Claim Bryansk

Although the German high command announced that Bryansk had been abandoned last Monday night, the Russians still made no claim of that stronghold's capture and German troops apparently were trying desperately to save it.

Elsewhere along the 600-mile fighting front the Red army continued its virtually uninterrupted advance, according to a Soviet communique.

More towns were reported captured in a steady Russian close-in on the Bryansk-Smolensk railway, the fruits of a broadening flanking movement south of Smolensk.

Southwest of Kharkov gains of up to 5 more miles were claimed in a push to envelop Poltava, last major core of Nazi resistance in the eastern Ukraine.

On the Pavlograd front in the middle Ukraine the Russians reported advances up to 15 miles down the Samara River, a tributary of the Dniper northeast of Dniepropetrovsk.

In the southern Ukraine the Red army gained 15 more miles in twin thrusts toward Zaporozhe, site of the southernmost bridge over the Dnieper, and toward Melitopol, gateway to the German-held Crimea.

Rokossovsky in Command

Stalin's order of the day announcing the fall of Nezhin was addressed to Gen. Constantine Rokossovsky, the victor of Stalingrad, who is regarded as one of the Red army's ablest offensive commanders. His assignment to this salient was an indication of its importance in Moscow's plans to split the Germans' middle Dnieper defenses.

Once they reach the Dnieper, Rokossovsky's forces might, in a flanking drive upon Kiev, force the hard-pressed Nazis to abandon all of southern Russia. Spearheading the assault were some of Russia's

Marshall Makes Surprise Visit To Mexico City

Mexico City, Sept. 15 (AP).—Gen. George C. Marshall, United States Chief of Staff, arrived here today on a surprise visit and said German resistance north of Taranto and west of Brindisi in Italy had eased up, but "we do not know how long the Germans will continue fighting in the south."

In a statement on the war, Marshall, whose visit with Mrs. Marshall was so unexpected that only a few high-ranking Mexican officers and a guard of honor were at the airport, said the bitter engagements around Salerno yesterday were regarded "as the beginning of heavy fighting.

He said Allied bombings of Germany had been "very effective," with important Nazi utilities and the inner organization of Germany proper destroyed, and forecast even heavier raids.

As for the Pacific area, he said the Japanese were meeting difficulties "and they will have an even harder time a little later."

Nazi Counterattacks Break Against Firm Allied Stand

By Michael Chinigo
Representing the Combined United States Press
Distributed by the Associated Press

At the Front With the United States Fifth Army, Sept. 13 (Delayed).—Following a night of sparring, the Allied-Nazi battle was renewed furiously today when the German monster launched four attacks. It met a solid Allied machine which reared up and kicked the enemy squarely in the face, knocking out 14 tanks, breaking Nazi armored formations and decimating Panzer grenadiers.

I saw Jerry run for the first time from the open mainland battleground. He will run only a little way probably, but run he did.

Unaware of our strength, the German command yesterday noon repeated its attack tactics, hitting first with a frontal blow. A half-dozen tanks led the assault. Between 7 and 8:30 a. m., three tanks had been blasted in flames by artillery fire. Our infantry peppered the grenadiers.

At 8:40 a. m., one of our units blew up two Mark VI tanks with direct hits. The enemy swung to attack other positions. At 9:16 a. m., while Lieut. Gen. Mark W. Clark, Fifth Army commander, was visiting the front lines, he gave the order that this is where we would hold, and that we would not go one foot farther back.

Two additional Mark VI tanks, still another 50 yards to the right, went up in flames and smoke at 9:08 a. m. At 10 a. m. four Nazi tanks were knocked out at the Sele River junction, while the Navy shelled the area. The remaining enemy tanks ran and hid in the weeds, but succeeding air missions dropped tons of bombs over them.

The Nazis waded across the Sele River and our boys waited until they saw the whites of their eyes and then let the Germans have it. One mortar blew up six crack riflemen and a unit commanded by

Allies Smash Strongholds Guarding Lae

Pincers Column Moves to Within 2 Miles of Town

By the Associated Press

Allied Headquarters, Southwest Pacific (Thursday), Sept. 16.—Allied forces have crashed through the main core of resistance west of the Japanese air base at Lae, New Guinea, and the other arm of a steadily advancing pincers has moved from the east to within two miles of the town's center.

Following quickly the overrunning of other prepared positions on both sides of Lae, the new successes were announced today by Gen. Douglas MacArthur.

Heath's Plantation, eight miles west of Lae, fell to a force moving down the Markham Valley after a stiff fight. This force, brought in by big air transports September 5, also overran Vernon's Plantation, another center of resistance, and pushed ahead.

The force east of Lae standing nearest the town is comprised largely of Australians, veterans of African campaigns against the Germans, who are gravely menacing the bigger of Lae's two airdromes. This force is one which landed from the sea September 4.

Ahead of the Markham Valley troops, Mitchell medium bombers raked enemy positions along the valley road with bombs and strafing bullets.

The valley troops now are within five and a half miles of Lae, having also overrun Whittaker's plantation.

In the Solomons, 16 Japanese planes were destroyed in a new American raid on the enemy's big air base of Kahili on Bougainville and the isolated Japanese garrison at Vila on Kolombangara bombed twice. Fighters escorting the bombers shot down seven of 27 interceptors.

Bombs Rained On London, Paris Areas

Waves of Allied Planes Racing to Europe in New Raids

By the Associated Press

London (Thursday), Sept. 16.—Suburban areas of London suffered their heaviest air raid in months last night while waves of Allied bombers streamed out over the coast toward the continent in the wake of powerful attacks on Paris and other sections of France.

The bombers over London hit a number of districts and caused casualties. However, the raiders were not numerous.

The Allied night bombers crossed the sky a few hours after American Flying Fortresses bombed an aircraft factory in the Paris area and other Fortresses, Liberators and Marauders hit French air fields.

The main targets of the Fortresses in the Paris area were the Hispano-Suiza and the Caudron-Renault aircraft plants and the cam ball-bearing works.

Flying Fortresses also attacked the airfield at Romilly while Liberators blasted other Nazi airdromes in France.

Sixteen enemy fighters were reported shot down and Allied losses were put at six heavy bombers and three fighters.

Preliminary announcements indicated the Fortresses and Liberators might have made up one of the biggest heavy bomber forces ever to strike at the Continent.

Up to today, Flying Fortresses have struck at 14 targets this month—four of them were aircraft plants and nine Nazi airfields. The other target was Stuttgart, industrial center in southwest Germany.

The attacks on German air facilities have a dual objective—they whittle down the Nazi resistance to Allied raids on key war industrial centers and add to the mounting Allied air superiority against the day of the Allies' big drive on Germany.

Italian, Greek Isles Reported Occupied by Allied Forces

By the Associated Press

Ankara, Sept. 15.—A foreign naval source said today that the Italian Dodecanese island of Leo and the Greek Aegean island of Samos were occupied by invading Allied forces approximately three days ago.

Leo has a valuable naval seaplane base. Samos is the site of one of the best airdpomes in the Aegean area.

Both islands, about 50 miles apart, are off Turkey's west coast and north of the Italian island of Rhodes.

Samos, separated from the Turkish mainland by a 1-mile strait, is about 27 miles long and 14 miles wide.

Leo is a northerly island of the Dodecanese chain, which has variously been reported wrested from Italian control by the Germans in the last week. Leo is 6 miles long and 4 miles wide.

Ninth Army Shift Hints Balkan Thrust

By the Associated Press

London, Sept. 15.—The mystery of the whereabouts of the British Ninth Army, coupled with the reported successes of Yugoslav patriot forces apparently fighting along a prepared plan, hinted tonight that a strategic Balkan thrust was in the making.

A Cairo announcement that Maj. Gen. Lewis H. Brereton, who has been commander of all U. S. forces in the Middle East, had been shifted to an important new assignment, suggested he might now be with the Ninth Army.

War Alcohol Need Grows

WPB Turns Down Distillery 'Holiday' for Liquor-Making

By Ben W. Gilbert
Post Staff Writer

The War Production Board yesterday refused to permit the Nation's distillers to resume the manufacture of whisky for a two-week "holiday" period this year.

It was understood that increased demand for industrial alcohol from the combined rubber and high-octane gasoline programs, plus a reluctance by the War Food Administration to permit the diversion of grains to whisky while the agency is conducting a drive for more production prompted the decision which surprised distillers who had been led to expect that they would be granted the "holiday."

The distillery industry has been converted to the manufacture of industrial alcohol since last October when further manufacture of whisky was cut off. An estimated two to four years' stockpile of whisky exists but the industry has been doling it out slowly to prevent exhaustion of the supply before new ripened stocks are available to replace present stocks.

A WPB spokesman announced that the decision had been communicated to the Industrial Alcohol Advisory Committee at a meeting yesterday. He explained that War Production Chief Donald M. Nelson took the action because "requirements for industrial alcohol have substantially increased, and it was decided to continue building up the industrial alcohol stockpile."

Rubber Director Bradley Dewey confirmed reports that he had asked Nelson for forty million ad-

This Is War

By Noland Norgaard
Associated Press Staff Writer

Allied Headquarters in North Africa, Sept. 15.—Supported by the strongest air attacks ever launched in front of an Allied Army and by naval bombardment, American and British troops beat off the most violent German counterattacks yet mounted in Italy after again yielding small bits of their 27-mile bridgehead in the week-old, seesaw battle of Salerno.

On forced march from the south, Gen. Sir Bernard L. Montgomery's Eighth Army dashed 25 miles up the Calabrian Coast to capture the Mediterranean village of Belvedere, narrowing the gap between his force and Lieut. Gen. Mark W. Clark's Fifth Army to 67 miles and raising the prospect of early relief by land as well as by sea.

The crucial battle of Salerno roared and flamed throughout yesterday and last night along the whole slender front from the port of Salerno around its crescent-shaped bay to Agropoli, with both sides throwing fresh troops and armor into action.

Eighth Army 50 Miles Away

(The British radio declared that unofficial reports placed the Eighth Army vanguard at Scalea, on the coast 15 miles north of Belvedere, which would narrow the gap between the commands to little more than 50 airline miles. The BBC broadcast, recorded by NBC, said Scalea possessed an excellent air field.)

[The International News Service said that General Clark was in the thick of the heaviest battle yet waged in the Mediterranean theater. A front-line Army correspondent revealed that the general had toured the entire front from Salerno down to Agropoli under heavy fire, taking the same risks as his men.

[The general was quoted as having declared: "We're doing a good job."]

Allies Occupy Capri

Offshore just west of Salerno, the Allies occupied Capri, the little island to which the Emperor Tiberius retired in 27 A. D.

"Bitter fighting continues in the Fifth Army sector," the Allied communique said. "Determined counterattacks have been carried out by both sides. In some places our troops have been forced to yield ground, but new positions

The most important tax man in Congress, Chairman Doughton (Democrat) of North Carolina, of the House Ways and Means Committee, disclosed yesterday he engaged an "expert" to make out his September 15 income tax return.

Significantly, Doughton called the committee to a night session to see if something couldn't be done to simplify the return, come next March 15.

are being consolidated and reinforcements continue to arrive rapidly. . . .

"Troops with their supplies and equipment continue to be disembarked on the beaches of the Salerno area by the Royal and United States Navies working under Vice Admiral Henry K. Hewitt, USN. The bombardment of enemy positions by strong forces of cruisers and destroyers continues.

"During the night of September 13-14 and throughout yesterday, heavy, medium and light bombers, fighter-bombers and fighters of the Northwest African Air Forces in their most intensive and concentrated operations to date attacked roads and railroads, enemy positions, transport and troop concentrations at numerous points around the Salerno area."

(Lt. S. B. Shapiro, representing the combined British and Canadian press, reported that the Germans eased up in their counterattacks, and gave indications that they were making a limited withdrawal from the salient they drove into the Allied bridgehead.)

The whole battle scene was veiled in smoke and dust. Generally the Allies were in the low flats and the Germans were ensconced in better positions in the wooded hills rising sharply from the coastal lowlands.

The Germans brought up at least a fourth division, the Twenty-ninth motorized, through heavy day and night bombings of Allied planes which flew more than 2000 sorties in the 24 hours ended at dawn today. The Fifteenth and Sixteenth German armored and the Hermann Goering divisions previously were in the combat, striving powerfully to throw the Allies into the sea.

The Nazi attacks were supported strongly by tanks, which were driven back by blistering Allied fire. One US combat team alone destroyed 13 enemy tanks. Gray warships slipped close to shore, emptying salvo after salvo from their smoking steel rifles into Nazi tanks and machine-gun nests. One US cruiser alone fired 335 rounds yesterday.

As dusk fell over the blood-stained battlefield, Allied troops were compelled to yield some ground to straighten their lines and consolidate their positions against expected night assaults. Despite the withdrawal, a military spokesman asserted at the end of the day:

"The situation is a little more in our favor."

Nazis Capture Villages

The heaviest and most sustained German drives were made from the villages of Excevilla and Armonina in high ground overlooking the entire southern part of the Fifth Army holding in the Sele River Valley. The Allies withdrew in that sector, leaving the villages in German hands.

Clark's problem was to hold and expand the bridgehead while driving into the high ground and pushing German batteries beyond the range of the beaches. One of his officers summarized the situation thus:

"The enemy is attacking incessantly because he realizes this is his best opportunity. Allied forces have proven they can beat the Germans and know that they can do it again."

The officer added that frontline reports said the Americans and Britons had great confidence.

There still was no word from the American Seventh Army, which fought in Sicily.

(German broadcasts shifted abruptly from boasting assertions that the Fifth Army was embarking in beaten retreat from Salerno and said the Allies were resisting near the coast under naval gunfire cover.)

All Italy's Toe Captured

Montgomery's Eighth Army had added virtually all the Italian toe to its conquest. It was driving through rough country and over and around effective Nazi demolitions. Despite its speed, the opinion at headquarters was that it might be several days before it reached a junction with Clark. Montgomery was driving large elements of at least one German division before him. The retreating foe gave no sign of standing to fight.

Across the peninsula above the heel, another British force which had captured Bari, Taranto and Brindisi made contact with a rear guard of the German first parachute division at Gioia, 28 miles above Taranto and inland. Italian troops in the Taranto area were said to be assisting the British. Some 300 Allied prisoners, including two Greek generals, were liberated.

Farther up the Adriatic coast, Liberators from the Middle East bombed Pescara, almost directly across the peninsula from Rome. The rail junction of Potenza between Naples and Taranto was pounded Monday night by the RAF.

The massive air assaults in close support of the Fifth Army were unlike anything seen before in this war. Every available plane was used.

Big formations of Flying Fortresses poured hundreds of tons of bombs on the narrow strip of enemy territory around the village of Eboli, nine miles inland from the midsection of the Allied beachhead north of the Sele River.

Thousands of bombs not only tore up the roads but blanketed a quarter-mile stretch on either side of the main roadway where enemy vehicles were dispersed under cover.

Medium bombers and fighter-bombers also pounded every target offered in a determined attempt to prevent the Germans from throwing more and more reinforcements into the battle. Fighters also were used. No Allied plane was lost, and they shot down six Germans.

German fighters made only one half-hearted effort to interfere with the American bombers. Allied air officials declared the German air force appeared to be under orders to avoid combat. Most of the available enemy fighters were believed to be employed in swift, hit-and-run attacks against Allied warships and barges carrying Clark's reinforcements.

Hint of Balkan Invasion Seen

ignorance of the movements of the Ninth Army, whose size and equipment have been kept a military secret. Ankara and Stockholm reports had the Army sailing from Syrian bases after two years' training.

The Germans repeatedly have suggested the Ninth was being saved for a Balkan invasion.

The route from the Middle East to the Balkans would traverse the German-occupied islands of Rhodes and Crete, and these islands in Allied hands would provide valuable bases for bombers and fighters in any air umbrella, vital to a landing in Greece. The Germans hold Crete, and recently reported they took over the control of the Dodecanese from the Italians.

Reports from Yugoslavia said Partisan forces had occupied more than 100 miles of the Dalmatian coastline on the Adriatic Sea opposite Italy. They were said to have seized a large area in Slovenia, which previously had been occupied by Italian troops. Other reports said two divisions of Partisan troops were moving toward Serbia, and there were reports of large scale fighting throughout Bosnia.

The German news agency DNB, in a Berlin broadcast, however, claimed the entire Dalmatian and Albanian coastline was in German hands.

Advices reaching here tonight, according to the Yugoslav information bureau, said a Patriots army had captured Gorazde on the Drina River, cutting the railroad line between Belgrade and Serajevo.

The late advices, according to the information bureau, said the patriots were holding fast to the Adriatic coast territory they captured yesterday and that the siege of Split was continuing.

A broadcast heard in London by the Associated Press from the Algiers radio declared that "important new military developments are imminent."

Agitation for a break with Germany was reported growing in Bulgaria.

Cairo reported, however, that despite great confusion caused by Italy's surrender, the Germans continued to have the Balkan situation well in hand and would have to be pried out of the area by Allied forces.

5th U. S. Army Surmounts Crisis Of Nazi Opposition at Salerno

By the Associated Press

London, Sept. 15—The American Fifth Army, although still desperately and bloodily engaged, emerged today from the crisis of Salerno.

The struggle still was rising in violence, but the terrible hours when the entire Allied Salerno bridgehead had passed, and the situation appeared steadily improving.

This improvement was supported even by German announcements, which had wholly dropped their braggadocio of yesterday.

The Allied air arm tremendously increased the score of its operations in support of the mixed American and British forces digging their toes into the Salerno beachheads, and all signs were that the previously inadequate Allied fighter cover had been supplemented.

Becoming Major Front

Unfolding events made it strongly appear that the Italian Peninsula was developing into a major front in the fullest and most fateful sense.

No longer was the question "where next for the Allies?" being so widely uttered. Now it had come down to the hard, single reality of Italy at this present hour. It was apparent that we and the Germans were committed there to a battle that might be as meaningful as was that of the Marne in the last war.

It was soberly estimated in London that what the Allies are doing in Italy and what they planned to do could well have the effect of taking the weight of 25 Nazi divisions off the Russians.

Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower's communique telling of continuous arrivals of very heavy Allied reinforcements in Italy was in such terms as to suggest he was only beginning an immense marshaling of men. This had its counterpart in accumulating reports of a great flow of Nazi reinforcements southward into the peninsula.

Strong German Defense

A Nazi command willing to spend what it already had spent at Salerno, it was reasoned here, must be prepared for prodigious defensive efforts farther to the north in Italy, where the real struggle will be joined.

There were several indications that the Russians already were being measurably helped. For example, the report was published here that armored German units now fighting in Italy had come from Russia, and there was speculation that Russian dissatisfaction with efforts of its Western Allies might be proportionately reduced.

While the Salerno situation was sharply improved from yesterday, the enemy still was coming at us strongly. Dispatches from Allied headquarters told of Nazi troops still beating their way up to the front in the face of the blows of our air force.

Although our positions had been bettered in the last 24 hours, we had a net loss for the entire period since the enemy first sprang back at us, and a mile of ground lost in the early hours of such an action is more punishing than it would appear on its face.

Yanks Coming, Not Going, Germans Admit

By the Associated Press

London, Sept. 15.—The German radio, which said yesterday that the Allies were withdrawing from the Salerno region in Italy, toned down its tales tonight in the face of bitter fighting, and admitted the Allied troops were still coming instead of going.

Grudgingly acknowledging that Allied resistance had stiffened during the night, the German international information bureau, in a broadcast recorded by the Associated Press, asserted that British and American invasion troops in the sector had lost so many men and so much material that despite reinforcements, a resumption of the offensive was inconceivable.

The Nazis admitted fresh American landings from the fleet they said last night was in Salerno Bay to carry Allied troops away from a beating at the hands of the Germans.

Berlin had its usual batch of new claims to minimize the Allied toehold on the beaches. The information bureau asserted that a considerable part of the German operational aim had been reached, with the Nazis controlling the high ground, and United States troops pressed together on the plains, and that contact between British troops stationed in the town of Salerno—which the Germans said they held last night—and American troops in the Salerno bridgehead was definitely broken.

Two desperate attempts of the Americans with tanks and motorized units to break out were repelled and the Germans pressed them back toward the sea, the Nazi propaganda agency declared.

Proof of the German successes, it said, was shown in the withdrawal of Nazi troops from the American bridgehead for use in throwing the British back farther into the city of Salerno.

The German air force in Italy was attacking the British-American invasion fleet by day and night with good success, the Berlin broadcast declared, sinking 14 transport ships in the last 36 hours, despite heavy antiaircraft fire.

None of these claims received any confirmation from Allied sources.

Lieut. Col. Preston Murphy, Fort Collins, Colo., shot all the others.

A few minutes later another group of 40 Germans used the well-known ruse of coming up to our lines with white flags and then dropping them and attacking. But our men were not fooled.

Their crossfire entirely wiped out the enemy, some of whom ran forward and more scrambled back. The fight is not nearly over. The enemy still appears to be striving to drive a wedge.

Why is the "Guardsman" the favored suit at $50 among men who know clothes?

In these times, $50 is a very practical price to pay for your clothes. Garments of fine quality and character cannot be purchased for less. At $50, our celebrated "Guardsman" is first in preference among men who insist upon distinguished appearance and staunch quality for the long haul ahead. The "Guardsman" is designed with subtle accents that make a man look somewhat taller, trimmer, more stalwart. A combination of fine needle-work and construction gives a soft roll to the lapels, a soft "drape" at the chest, and makes the whole suit hang gracefully, luxuriously. Masterful attention to detail gives the "Guardsman" the same appearance of casual ease, the same air of quiet distinction you have always admired in the most expensive clothes. And for this Fall, as always, the "Guardsman" has been customized for us in superb virgin wool fabrics—in many colors, weaves and patterns not ordinarily found elsewhere. Men who have never worn Saltz F Street clothes should discover the "Guardsman" today!

Balloonists Led Invasion Thrust

By the Associated Press

Allied Headquarters In North Africa, Sept. 15.—RAF balloon barrage crews clamberd ashore with American and British assault forces on the beaches in the Salerno area of Italy to give the ground troops and barges immediate protection from low-flying bombers, an RAF statement related today.

"One detachment landed with their balloons in the Gulf of Salerno before daylight on invasion day," the statement said, "and waded ashore through three and a half feet of water carrying their balloons which they planted on the beach in a wave of heavy machine-gun and mortar fire."

The balloons were brought in at 200 feet altitude and then raised.

"We had hardly set foot on the sand when the German guns and mortars opened up on us and the balloons," said the British leader of one of the first detachments. "One of the balloons was shot down, but a new one was sent up almost immediately."

The balloon crews were only 100 yards from a powerful German gun. A boat approached and a naval officer shouted, "Is that the enemy on your left?" The balloonmen replied: "You bet it is. Can you clear him out?" A few minutes later a broadside from a warship knocked the gun out.

Then the gun crew came out to surrender.

The Fist of Mars—

It strikes a mighty blow. When an ammunition ship blew up in the harbor of Palermo, Sicily, these two Axis freighters were blasted out of the water onto the dock and a great hole was ripped in the sea wall.

3 Jap Ships Hit In Hongkong Raid

Chungking, Sept. 15 (AP).—Planes of Maj. Gen. Claire L. Chennault's Fourteenth United States Air Force attacked Japanese shipping in Hongkong Harbor last Saturday, badly damaging two ships, a communique from Lieut. Gen. Joseph W. Stilwell's headquarters said today.

The Americans also dive-bombed a destroyer off Sanchau Island near Hongkong.

Dear Mr. Washingtonian:

Now that we're at the start of a new season, isn't it time to do a little inventory-taking? Yes, the war picture looks brighter, but this is no time to be complacent - there's still a hard fight ahead - a tough fight. This is the time for all of us to keep up the good work, to work a little harder, to do a better job.

In the meantime, there's a daily life to be lived. To the best of our experience and ability, Raleigh will continue to help you in being economical of your shopping time and money. And since this is the time for sensible buying, we know you'll buy only what you need. You'll buy good things that will last, make every dollar do its duty. Because, what you used to spend for non-essentials, is now going into EXTRA WAR BONDS.

Raleigh specializes in making every hard-earned dollar you spend on your appearance do its best, in featuring clothing, furnishings, hats and shoes of recognized quality, names with a national reputation. For good clothing, like all good investments, is true economy in the long run...and good grooming is a great confidence-builder.

Take stock of your appearance NOW THAT FALL IS HERE...buy those extra War Bonds first...do those extra things for victory...and resolve you'll look your best, and do your best.

Very truly yours,

First American Nurses Land at Italian Front

By Reynolds Packard
(Distributed by International News Service)

With The American Fifth Army In Italy, Sept. 15.—The first American Army nurses to debark on European soil since 1917 landed in the Salerno sector of Italy this afternoon from landing barges and immediately went to work in a hospital.

Garbed in GI steel helmets and full length fatigue uniforms with long trousers, at first they attracted little attention until one soldier noticed their dainty way of wading ankle deep onto the beaches and cried:

"Wow! Women—and here!"

Many of the nurses were veterans of the Sicilian campaign.

The first group of American nurses to arrive in Italy totaled 57. Lieut. Alys Salter of Alexandria, La., chief of the group, was first ashore. She said:

"I am getting accustomed to this."

She was with the first hospital units to land in Africa and Sicily.

Doctors Land Under Fire

By Don Whitehead
Associated Press Staff Writer

With Allied Armies in Italy, Sept. 12 (Delayed).—The first American Evacuation Hospital to follow the troops in the invasion of Italy began receiving patients today in canvas-walled wards.

Tents and equipment came ashore on the invasion beach last night and less than 12 hours later, casualties returning from the front lines were receiving expert care from the staff directed by Lieut. Col. Paul K. Sauer, of New York City.

Overnight a modern hospital had sprung up in the plain over which the American troops had pushed back the Germans only two days before.

Sauer and his staff landed in Italy at 2 p. m. on invasion day and spent the next 48 hours peeking out of slit trenches while enemy guns shelled the beach area, and planes bombed and strafed around them.

"When we got ashore we found the enemy was only 800 yards ahead of us. It was an exciting introduction to war," Sauer said.

The doctors were machine-gunned and strafed as they crouched in landing boats.

"We spent our first 48 hours on Italian soil in foxholes," Sauer said. "Then our tents and equipment arrived late yesterday, we worked all night setting them up."

Occasionally they have to break off work and jump for foxholes when enemy planes dive in.

Near Sauer's evacuation hospital, Maj. J. W. Pickens of Cleburne, Tex., had a divisional hospital clearing station operating with a capacity of 100 beds.

Nazis 'Dethrone' King Vittorio, Proclaim Italy 'Fascist Republic' in Name of Mussolini

By Thomas C. Watson
International News Service Staff Writer

London, Sept. 15.—Adolf Hitler's effort to resurrect the "rescued" Benito Mussolini's defunct power produced a new Gilbert and Sullivan twist today—a "Fascist republic."

In the name of the Duce, whose "liberation" from captivity Hitler trumpeted last Sunday, a German-controlled station using the Rome radio's wave length broadcast a proclamation announcing the new state.

By inference the puppet regime disassociated itself from the royal House of Savoy whose King. Vittorio Emanuele III kicked Mussolini out of office last July 25 and whom Mussolini "dethroned" yesterday.

The proclamation declared that Mussolini now "resumes the supreme direction of Fascism in Italy." It announced reconstitution of the Fascist Party under the new name, "Republican Fascist Party."

The five-point pronunciamento further announced the launching of a "purge" in the disrupted Fascist ranks and appealed to all "loyal" Italians to "collaborate in comradely fashion" with the Germans. Those who fail to do so, it said, will be punished as "traitors."

This latest act in the Hitlerian "rescue of Mussolini" extravaganza was marked by the continued absence of Mussolini himself. The protagonist of the farce remained silent. It was not his voice that read the proclamation to which his name purportedly was signed.

Nor did his Nazi prompters give the world the slightest cue to his whereabouts, though it is now fully four days since Mussolini was supposed to have been snatched from imprisonment by Hitler's elite parachutists and Gestapo men.

And the people of Rome—among other Italian cities—apparently failed to appreciate the "favor" conferred upon them by Der Fuehrer in dragging Il Duce out of the shadows.

Indeed, so unappreciative were the Romans that the German commander in the Italian capital found it necessary to oust all of the city's administrative officials and replace them with "special commissioners" more subservient to the Nazi will, Nazi broadcasts disclosed.

Swiss dispatches, meanwhile, said all of Premier Badoglio's cabinet ministers who were unable to escape from Rome before the Germans took over the capital had been arrested. These were said to include Foreign Minister Raffaele Guariglia.

MORE MEN WEAR BOND CLOTHES THAN ANY OTHER CLOTHES in AMERICA

This, my friend, is "The Case of The Talking Man."

His name—John Q. Public, American! John Q. Public who picks his leaders on sheer merit and square dealing.

He is a vocal chap. Give him your best for his money, and he'll tell the world. Just as he's done about Bond's.

Examine the evidence, my dear Watson. One could spin a long yarn about Bond's smooth needlework and distinguished style. These test tubes could tell you plenty about Bond's rich New England woolens—and how they outwear the ordinary kind, two to one. And need I again point out how Bond has held the line against rising prices—while most living costs continued to scoot up? That's on the record!

Mystery? Not here! The sensational swing to Bond's is no mere accident. The facts are plain—they're giving the men of America something to talk about. The deduction is simple—you've got to be good to win first place!

That, my dear Watson, is elementary.

finest fighting forces—guards regiments previously honored by Stalin for their victories at Konotop, Bachmach and Sevsk.

While Rokossovsky's tank and infantry units stormed down the main Kiev rail line in a mounting menace to the whole Nazi grip on the Ukraine, a supporting column under Gen. Nikolai Vatutin was reported closing steadily upon Priluki, 40 miles southeast of Nezhin.

Meanwhile, German accounts suggested an intensive renewal of the Russian pincers attack on Smolensk, as well as a determined Red army attack in the Kuban.

Berlin broadcasts said that fierce Russian attacks temporarily had breached Nazi defenses northeast and southeast of Smolensk, and reported that street fighting was in progress in Novorossisk in the Kuban.

Autumn rains spread black bogs of mud along broad stretches of the front. The rains normally fall this time of year, continuing until the weather drops to freezing early in October and provides a solid, fast track for mobile operations.

A Nazi military commentator, Col. Ernst von Hammer, said in a broadcast that the Russians were exerting their greatest pressure northwest of Kharkov, where they were employing "extraordinarily strong tank and infantry masses in incessant attacks against inferior German forces." He conceded that losses on both sides were "considerable."

"German detaching moves are being continued," he said.

Letter Confirms Maj. Gen. Sharp Is Jap Prisoner

Monkton, Md., Sept. 15 (AP).—A letter—10 months en route—has been received from Maj. Gen. William F. Sharp to confirm a report that he has been a prisoner of the Japanese since the fall of Mindanao.

The letter, sent to Mrs. Sharp, was the first from General Sharp since his capture. It was dated November 12, 1942.

General Sharp was listed as missing in action until January of this year. On New Year's Day Mrs. Sharp heard a message which had been broadcast from Tokyo by the Japanese. Ostensibly, it came from General Sharp.

Three weeks ago a form post card on which messages merely were checked off was received by Mrs. Sharp.

But not until the letter in the general's handwriting arrived was Mrs. Sharp sure that her husband was alive and in reasonably good health—last November.

General Sharp wrote that he is getting along as well as could be expected. We learn that few things are necessary and almost anything is edible."

8 More Italian Ships Surrender To Allied Forces at Cyprus

By the Associated Press

Nicosia, Cyprus, Sept. 15.—Eight Italian vessels, including a gunboat and two minesweepers, reached this eastern Mediterranean port today, carrying about 200 Italians from the Dodecanese Islands, who told stories of fierce fighting going on there between Italians and Germans.

The refugees included a number of Italian military officers, who exchanged their automatic pistols for biscuits and tea—the first tea, many said, that they had tasted in three years.

The small armada, flying the Italian flag, was escorted along the Cyprus coast by a British naval launch. With the gunboat and minesweepers were three auxiliary schooners and two small cargo ships.

E. A. Klingler, executive of a large mercantile firm, said flatly that there is no green tea. And there won't be until the Allies dominate China, Formosa and Japan itself. Some black tea is arriving from Ceylon and India, Mr. Klingler asserted the United States tea stocks July 1 were only 11,019,000 pounds as compared with 38,184,000 pounds at the same period last year.

Amazing results in building STURDY BODIES!

1—Promote the flow of vital digestive juices in the stomach
2—Energize your body with RICH, RED BLOOD!
YOUNG people, especially those of grammar and high school age, are prone to be deficient in stomach digestive juices and red-blood.
A growing-person who is operating on a 65 to 70% healthy blood volume or a stomach digestive capacity of only 50 to 60% normal is severely handicapped.
In such cases Nature needs extra help. Organic troubles or focal infection, if they exist, must be corrected. Tissue foods must be digested and rich, red-blood must be present to build sturdy bodies.
SSS Tonic is especially designed to build-up BLOOD STRENGTH when deficient . . . and to promote those STOMACH JUICES which digest the food so the body can make proper use of it in tissue building and repair.
These two important results enable the body to make use of the food as Nature intended. Thus you may gain a keen appetite . . . firm flesh . . . body energy . . . mental alertness!
Build Sturdy Health and Help America Win
Thousands and thousands of users have testified to the benefits SSS Tonic has brought to them and scientific research shows that it gets results—that's why so many say "SSS Tonic builds sturdy health—makes you feel like yourself again." At drug stores in 10 and 20 oz. sizes. ©S.S.S.Co.

President May Request Service Bill

A presidential request for national service legislation to supplement the father draft as a means of mobilizing wartime manpower was regarded as likely in some Administration quarters yesterday.

Informed officials stated that War Mobilization Director James F. Byrnes had decided to support a labor draft law as a result of his recent review of the West Coast manpower situation, but that Bernard M. Baruch, head of the World War I War Industries Board and White House counselor to both the President and Byrnes, was advising against enactment of national service legislation at this time—until the new comprehensive manpower and production control plan for the West Coast had received a fair trial.

Would Welcome Request

It was understood that officials of the War Manpower Commission would welcome a request to Congress for national service legislation, although both labor and management members of the WMC Management-Labor-Agriculture Policy Committee are reported to share Baruch's views.

National service legislation returned to the news yesterday with testimony by Undersecretary of War Robert P. Patterson repeating his indorsement of the Austin-Wadsworth measure now before Congress. Appearing before the Senate Military Affairs Committee, Patterson made clear, however, that he was not speaking officially, but only voicing his personal opinion.

What stand the President has taken could not be determined, although it was reported in one quarter that a message to Congress requesting national service legislation already had been prepared.

However, it was also reported that the President had decided to make no reference to manpower in his message to Congress timed for delivery tomorrow. This raised the possibility that the Chief Executive has decided to withhold action for some time, following the line of approach reportedly suggested by Baruch.

Work Measure Ready

Administration officials believed it unlikely that the President would indorse the Austin-Wadsworth measure which gives prime responsibility for administering the proposed labor draft to Selective Service. An alternative measure has been prepared by WMC for use in the event of a Presidential request, which is much more detailed than the Austin-Wadsworth measure and is reported to contain numerous "safeguards" desired by both labor and management, absent from the Austin-Wadsworth bill.

The WMC measure would be administered by the field offices of the War Manpower Commission and would enable WMC to extend its present controls to cover all available manpower. At present, by using the Selective Service Act as a "work or fight" sanction, WMC has obtained control over able-bodied draft age men. A national service measure would provide control over women, men over 38 and physically handicapped men under 38.

Patterson Statement

Patterson, in a formal statement, declared:

"I know of no way of recruiting the additional workers needed, or of bringing the turnover rate within normal bounds, short of a system that recognizes and gives effect to an obligation on everyone of working age to render national service for the duration of the war.

"Our great strength in manpower would then be fully mobilized to win the war. . . . The War Department believes that the prompt passage of a law for national service would be of prime value in bringing the war to a successful and swift conclusion."

Baruch, in a report to Byrnes made jointly with John Hancock, another adviser to Byrnes, commented that national service legislation would fail administratively if the West Coast program failed administratively, and indicated that the new controls being tried out for the West Coast have many of the elements of a national service law.

Burma Shipping Blasted

New Delhi, Sept. 15 (AP).—Royal Air Force Beaufighters, continuing their attacks on Japanese river shipping on the Irrawaddy River in Burma, yesterday knocked out two cargo steamers and blasted more than 50 enemy sampans, a British communique announced today. All the Beaufighters returned.

Hibernating

Draft Boards Rechecking Registrants

Washington's draft boards yesterday made preparations for a two-week hibernation—to begin today and lasting until October 1—during which they will conduct a thorough examination of all draft registrants in the District.

From now until October, the boards will be open to the public only for two hours each day—11:30 a. m. to 1:30 p. m.

Purpose of the roundup will be to make certain that no available men—whether fathers, 4-F's or those in any classification whatever—are overlooked before the October 1 deadline to induct men with children.

No way out for the parents was seen by draft officials here, unless Congress in the meantime takes steps to delay their induction by specific legislation. This was considered a strong possibility, despite repeated warnings by Government executives, from the President down, that drafting of fathers is essential to meet quotas in the armed forces.

Another deadline came and passed yesterday, as men in non-deferrable occupations were given their last chance to register with the U. S. Employment Service for jobs in essential war work—or face almost certain induction, regardless of parenthood status.

But there was no rush to the USES yesterday, according to reports from the office of director K. Vernon Banta.

pointment of Senator Overton (Democrat) of Louisiana as chairman of a subcommittee on the restaurant sanitary code bill introduced Tuesday by McCarran, with the Nevada Senator and Senator Burton (Republican) of Ohio as members. The bill provides for sanitation gradings of all District restaurants and prohibits employment of persons suffering from contagious diseases or persons who are carriers.

An open hearing on the bill retaining pension benefits for public school teachers who take leave of absence to enter the service or work in a war industry will be held tomorrow at 11 a. m. by a subcommittee appointed yesterday, headed by McCarran with Senators Tydings (Democrat) of Maryland and Holman (Republican) of Oregon as members.

The District Committee reported favorably on three other bills; one strengthening the present concealed weapons act, with an amendment to provide that no dangerous weapon of any kind may be carried without a permit from the superintendent of police; another granting liquor licenses to clubs established in Washington for officers of the United Nations; and a third giving permission to Lansburgh and Bros. department store to install steam-heating pipes.

Army High Command Insists on Father Draft to Meet 'Target Dates' provide necessary replacements, Undersecretary Patterson said 700,000 additional persons must be inducted into the Army during the remaining four months of this year.

"That is a call on the manpower of the Nation that cannot be tampered with," Patterson said. "The Navy has needs of like importance to the safety of the Nation. We have been told by the Selective Service people that this additional strength cannot be furnished to the armed forces unless a substantial number of fathers are included."

Morning testimony was in public hearings attended jointly by members of the House and Senate Military Committees, but the doors were closed on the afternoon session to enable witnesses to answer questions on information of possible value to the enemy.

While the armed forces solidly opposed the Wheeler bill, blocking the fathers' draft until January 1, the outcome of a showdown Senate vote on the bill probably next week was still in doubt. At least prior to the high command testimony, Senate votes for the bill appeared to be in the majority.

Immediately following the day's hearings (to be continued through Monday of next week), Senator Burton K. Wheeler (Democrat) of Montana announced he will move to make the bill the Senate's unfinished business, probably tomorrow. The Senate itself recessed until tomorrow, when action is scheduled on a pending minor measure now blocking Wheeler's move.

Sees No New Facts

"They haven't brough out any new facts, so far as I am concerned," Wheeler told newsmen. "I haven't changed my thought about the (Wheeler) bill in the slightest."

But Senate Majority Leader Barkley told reporters: "The Army has a program and has made a good case for it." He said he was "satisfied" with off-the-record Army answers bearing on Canadian and South American participation in the war.

Later, Senate Military Committee Chairman Robert R. Reynolds said there was no need to keep off the record information on the size of Canadian armed forces. Out of a population of 11 million, Reynolds said Canada had 682,000 men in the armed forces. Reynolds said Senator Sheridan Downey (Democrat) of California testified his State had 600,000 persons in the armed forces out of a 7 million population.

At the open morning session, Wheeler closely questioned both Patterson and McNarney on troop numbers here and overseas. The Army deputy chief of staff said approximately two million men are now overseas and there will be five million overseas at the end of 1944. The Montanan contended that would leave 2,700,000 men in this country at the end of next year if no more were drafted after 1943. McNarney said large training and service forces would necessarily be held here continuously, but the Army hoped to hold next year's draft to replacements. He said it was only a hope, and the 7,700,000 present goal may necessarily be revised upward.

To an observation by Wheeler that fathers of draft age "are worried about their families," McNarney snapped: "Every soldier is worrying about his family. That might make him fight a hell of a lot harder."

McNarney said Wheeler should consider also the morale of the mothers, sisters, sons and daughters "of the men now fighting this war."

"I think it is a lot better not to be defeated by the Axis than to please the people back home."

The armistice with Italy, both Patterson and McNarney said, had made no change in the high command figure of 7,700,000 at the end of this year as "the minimum required for the tasks ahead." They said any curtailment, reduction or postponement will change "strategical commitments" on which war plans are now based.

Plugging hard for national service legislation, the War Undersecretary stressed that deferment of fathers might cripple war production and "ruin us" in aviation by forcing induction of trained childless men holding key jobs in war plants.

"Right now the shortage of labor in aircraft plants is cutting down the number of planes that might be produced for waging war against our enemies," he testified.

Patterson said there are more than six million men of military age who have been deferred merely as fathers, and said no group should be thus exempted as a class. If this group is totally excused from military service, he said, "they will have no obligaion by law to do anything about prosecution of the war." Said Patterson: "The only deferment from military service should be occupational deferment."

Defense League Launches Test of Md. Work-or-Fight Law

The American Civil Liberties Union, through the Workers' Defense League of New York, last night announced its intention to test the constitutionality of the Maryland "work or fight" law, and retained two Baltimore lawyers to act for them as well as a corps of field investigators.

The entrance of the league into the fight, which started in Montgomery County after a 4-F Army reject was arrested for refusing to work for a farmer for $2 a day, came a few hours before the Maryland American Federation of Labor was scheduled to meet to decide what action, if any, would be taken to test the law.

Investigators Sent Out

The league retained Charles J. Stinchcomb and Joseph R. Paper and sent a corps of investigators into the field to talk with convicted men. They will go to county jails, including the Maryland House of Correction, and places of employment where convicted men are working under parole of police judges who placed them in the custody of complaining witnesses for work purposes under threat of 90 days in jail if they refuse to work for the complainant.

Paper said they expected to file a writ of habeas corpus in one of the rural counties of the State and to take their client, or clients, to a court nearer to Baltimore for argument and initial steps to have the law declared unconstitutional. Paper would not say in what county the writ was to be filed or in whose defense they were interested.

Findings Not Disclosed

The AFL meeting was expected to act following investigation by labor into the law's possible future harm to organized workers, according to Joseph Gillis, organizer.

Action by the Workers' League of New York is not expected to meet with opposition from Governor Herbert O'Conor. The Governor, when he signed the bill, made it clear it should be tested in the courts. In fact, he said at that time that was the only reason he signed the bill—to make a court test possible.

Called Travesty

Probe Asked Of Colman Court-Martial

By the Associated Press

Representative O'Toole (Democrat) of New York demanded of War Secretary Stimson yesterday an investigation of the court martial of Col. William T. Colman, saying, "The morale of the Army and of the public will be shattered by the retention of such specimens within our armed forces."

The New Yorker also demanded that Colman be suspended from all duties until the inquiry was completed. Earlier Representative Shafer (Republican) of Michigan described the outcome of the court martial as a travesty and said he would ask the Military Affairs Committee to review the case.

Colman, former commanding officer at Selfridge Field (Mich.) Air Base, was convicted by a general court martial of violating the articles of war and faces a demotion to the grade of captain with no chance for promotion for three years. He was found guilty of careless use of firearms in the shooting and wounding of a Negro private, and on four charges of drunkenness on duty.

If press accounts are accurate "and this man is allowed to remain an officer of the Army of the United States," O'Toole wrote Stimson, "I could not blame any civilian or member of the Army from failing to have respect for those who are known as 'officers and gentlemen' by act of Congress."

Shafer asserted "we can not have confidence in our military if we are going to allow officers to escape with nominal penalties for serious offenses."

The verdict against Colman is subject to review by the War Department here and the sentence will not take effect until finally approved.

Singer Requests Court to Sanction Professional Name

Darwin M. Bowen, Jr., who sang in a Watergate concert on July 18 under the name of Glenn Darwin, asked District Court yesterday to legitimize his professional name.

Bowen, who was reported to have been taken from a Bolling Field laundry unit to sing at the concert, also asked that the name of his wife, Virda, also be changed to Darwin. Bowen entered the army under the name of Darwin on advice of his draft board, and wants to end the confusion of having two names. Just before being drafted, Darwin got a contract from the Metropolitan Opera Company.

FBI Chief Cites Payments Made to Nazi Spy Suspect

Director J. Edgar Hoover of the Federal Bureau of Investigation announced yesterday the arrest in Newark, N. J., of John Da Silva Purvis, 43 on charges that he acted as a spy for Germany.

PURVIS

Hoover said Purvis transmitted information to his "principals" in Europe, and on two occasions received cash payments for his services.

Purvis, a Portuguese citizen, allegedly began his espionage activities early in 1942 when he was contacted by a crew member of a neutral vessel who had been recruited by the German Intelligence Service.

Hoover described Purvis as "dapper," said the Portuguese admitted under questioning he had received a letter by courier from a representative of the German Espionage Service in Europe, and that he sent a reply back by the same person who delivered the message to him.

One of the representatives of the German espionage system brought to the United States a personal letter addressed to Purvis containing certain identifying code words, Hoover said, and also brought a list of 16 specific assignments to be covered by Purvis.

The assignments, according to Hoover, included information on warship construction, damage at Pearl Harbor, losses in sea action, convoy information, information on American bases in Central and South America and on the African Coast, including mine fields, and numerous other tasks.

Hoover said Purvis wrote a letter for delivery to his German superiors acknowledging receipt of "70 pounds of sausage" and "70 pounds of cheese."

"It is believed that these remarks referred to money paid to Purvis for his activities," Hoover said.

Hoover said that in a letter acknowledging receipt of funds from the German spy system, Purvis demanded $500 a month for continuing his activities.

Raid Data Revealed, Court Is Told

By the Associated Press

New York, Sept. 15.—An agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation testifying today at the trial of two men on charges of conspiracy to violate the wartime Espionage Act, said one of them sent the following message to Germany in invisible ink:

"Roosevelt would be only too glad to see attacks on American coastal cities to rouse the Nation to greater war effort. Still no air-raid shelters. Protection against air raids completely inadequate. Complete confusion."

The FBI agent, Gerhardt Hundt, testified in Brooklyn Federal Court that the message was dated February 18, 1942, and signed "Fred Lewis," an alias identified by previous trial witnesses as that of Ernest P. Lehmitz, 57. Lehmitz and Erwin H. De Spretter, 52, former Staten Island air raid wardens, are being tried before a jury of eight men and four women. Conviction carries penalties of 30 years' imprisonment to death.

Hundt said that another message attributed to Lehmitz and dated January 26, 1942, informed the Germans that "the steamship Normandie is said to have sailed with troops." Arthur Garfield Hays, counsel for Lehmitz, cited for the records that the former French liner Normandie burned at its Hudson River pier on February 9 of that year.

Battle-Scarred Planes, Crews Arrive in D.C.

By John Singerhoff
Post Staff Writer

Three battle-bruised American bombers and their crews, back from socking Italy, Africa and Rumania with 469 tons of bombs on 217 missions, flew into National Airport yesterday that their war-weary pilots and gunners may rest.

With virtually every one of the 27 officers and enlisted men wearing the Distinguished Flying Cross, the two B-24 Liberators and one B-25 Mitchell winged in from Palm Beach, Fla. just 4½ days after leaving the African arena.

The Ninth Air Force bombers are credited with slamming the enemy from El Alamein across Africa to Sicily, and on to Italy. They slugged at the foe on Crete and even raided the Ploesti oil fields in Rumania. They bagged 28 enemy planes and several of Nazi Marshal Rommel's tanks in action at Tripoli, the Mareth Line, in Tunisia, Palermo, Naples and over Rome.

Peppered With Flak

Peppered with flak holes and bullets from enemy fighters, the bombers were cited by Maj. Gen. Lewis H. Brereton, commanding officer of US Army forces in the Middle East.

The valiant fliers were greeted at the airport by Brig. Gen. Hoyt S. Vandenberg, deputy chief of Army Air Forces, and other high-ranking Army and Navy officers. Each officer and man of the crews was introduced to the crowd.

The three planes are the first returned to America from the Middle East theater of operations. They are here to tour the country and especially to be exhibited to workers in aircraft factories.

In Action 15 Months

One Liberator, the Wash Tub, named after Maj. Martin (Wash) Walsh, who first flew her to Africa, had been in action against the enemy for 15 months, dropping 219 tons of bombs in 73 combat flights. It participated in three low-level attacks at Messina, Crotone and Ploesti, flew 551 combat hours and over 100,000 miles, and shot down 22 enemy aircraft.

The other heavy bomber, the Squaw, named after a girl in Minneapolis, likewise has an outstanding record. It was in service more than a year, participated in 71 missions, destroyed 6 enemy fighters and has flown the equivalent of four times around tthe world.

Desert Warrior, the Mitchell medium bomber, was cited by General Brereton "for meritorious service in aiding the defeat of the Axis forces from Alamein across Africa through Sicily. This aircraft has flown 73 combat missions, dropped over 70 tons of bombs, shot down 3 enemy fighters and flown 191 combat hours."

Crewmen Appear at Show

All of the crewmen appeared at the Army's "Back the Attack" last night before departing for their home in all parts of the country. The "Wash's Tub" crew was: Pilot, Capt. Edward G. Feeley; copilot, Capt. Richard W. Beck; navigator, Lieut. Clifford R. Ruggenheim; bombardier, Lieut. Irving C. Bloom; engineer, T/Sergt. Frederick P. Russek; radio operator, T/Sergt. Charles T. Cannon; top turret gunner, S/Sergt. Fred R. Bond; tail gunner, S/Sergt. Ray W. Romick and crew chief, Master Sergt. Richard C. Hebert.

The crew of the "Squaw": Pilot, Capt. Royden L. Lebrecht; copilot, Lieut. Clinton H. Killian; navigator, Lieut. Grover A. Zink; bombardier, Lieut. Albert J. Mickish; engineer, T/Sergt. Harold F. Weir, and gunners, Sergts. John A. Givens, jr., John R. Reilly, Paul E. Davidson, Adney J. Harmon, John Gunnu, and crew chief, Sergt. Paul T. Bashis.

On the "Warrier" were pilot, Capt Ralph M. Lower; copilot, Lieut. Clarence O. Seaman; bombardier, Lieut. Theodore R. Tate; navigator, Lieut. Floyd F. Pond, and gunners, Anthony A. Martin, James P. Garofalo and, crew chief, John R. Dawdy.

Mother Accepts

District Hero Decorated After Death

"Justly proud," a middle-aged Washington mother yesterday accepted for her son the Distinguished Service Cross for "extraordinary heroism" in the Tunisian action in which he gave his life.

The posthumous award for Second Lieut. Rufus E. O'Farrell, jr., called the outstanding hero of the Thirty-fourth Division, was presented to Mrs. O'Farrell, sr., of 1701 Park rd. nw. by Maj. Gen. John T. Lewis, commanding general of the military district of Washington, at ceremonies in his Pentagon headquarters.

Also on hand for the presentation were the 26-year-old soldier's father and many relatives.

Previously Cited

Mrs. O'Farrell listened silently, hands clasped, as General Lewis told how the youth, already wounded earlier in the North African action, exposed himself to enemy fire in order that his platoon might gain its objective.

Only three days before this action, Lieutenant O'Farrell had been cited for engaging a 23-man German patrol single-handed and putting a machine gun nest out of action.

The citation accompanying the Distinguished Service Cross read, in part: "Lieutenant O'Farrell was leading his platoon across open terrain in the assault on Gap. His men were subjected to heavy enemy machine gun and mortar fire, but under his leadership they continued the advance until a new concentration pinned them to the ground.

Gun Jammed

"Lieutenant O'Farrell was wounded but continued to advance on a machine gun nest and demanded its surrender. When the demand was refused, he fired tracers on the position. He received mortal wounds when his gun became jammed and he exposed himself in order to draw the enemy fire. These gallant actions enabled his flank scouts to destroy the enemy gun and its crew, and his platoon to gain its objective. In spite of his wounds he called his platoon sergeant, gave him his final instructions for continuing the attack, and refused aid."

The medal, Lieutenant O'Farrell's parents said, would be placed with other decorations, both athlectic and military, which the Washington youth won as a student at the DeWitt School, Fishburne Military School and the University of Maryland.

Movie Premiere Nets $1,250,000 in War Bonds Here

The District's bond quota was one and a quarter million dollars nearer its goal last night as a capacity audience of bond subscribers viewed the Washington premiere of "For Whom the Bell Tolls" at the Palace Theater.

Tickets for the long-heralded picturization of Ernest Hemingway's novel were distributed exclusively among bond buyers in conjunction with the 94 million dollar Third War Loan Drive.

The million dollar goal of the opening performance had already been reached by the end of last week, and many would-be subscribers were turned down as no seats were available for the past two days.

ditional gallons of alcohol in the past two days for 1944, but hastened to explain that the move would not change the rubber supply picture. Instead, Dewey said, the production program would be rearranged to make more rubber out of alcohol, freezing butylene capacity for the high-octane aviation gasoline program. The amount requested is about 20 per cent of the rubber program's alcohol requirements for 1944, Dewey said.

Unfavorable Effect

The War Food Administration was said to have advised WPB that diversion of grain to whisky might have an unfavorable psychological effect upon the WFA production program.

Earlier, WPB had planned to certify to WFA that it had excess alcohol-producing capacity available, leaving it up to the food agency to decide whether it wanted to permit resumption of whisky production. The present avoids the necessity of dumping the "hot potato" into WFA's lap.

Prospects of resumption of whisky production for a brief period in 1944 were uncertain, although officials doubted that any action would be taken in the early part of 1944, in any event.

Mounting stockpiles of industrial alcohol combined with an improved shipping situation appearing to pave the way for a conversion of some eastern alcohol plants from grain to molasses from the West Indies had encouraged the industry to believe that it would receive the holiday.

House to Weigh Peace Resolution

States participates in international peace machinery its establishment will be useless, Connally asserted he did not favor an international police force or an international state which would abolish sovereign nations.

"It seems to me fundamental that any international peace machinery must have authority to impose sanctions. This would include economic sanctions and, in the final analysis, military and naval sanctions," Connally declared.

The military and naval sanctions would be given authority by a certain quota of Army and Navy strength maintained in each member nation by agreement, it was explained.

A Foreign Relations subcommittee will meet next Wednesday to consider at least a dozen postwar peace resolutions, Connally said.

The resolution on which the House will be asked to vote Monday after "at least four hours debate" is:

"That the Congress hereby expresses itself as favoring the creation of appropriate international machinery with power adequate to establish and maintain a just and lasting peace, among the nations of the world, and as favoring participation by the United States therein."

35,000 Seaman To Be Needed for Newly Built Ships

With American cargo ship production now rising to phenomenal heights, the War Shipping Administration is turning attention to a new "must" program of recruiting at least 35,000 experienced officers and men by next fall.

Latest production reports, as of last Saturday, show the 2000th ocean-going vessel built under Maritime Commission contract since Pearl Harbor was delivered with "steam up" for immediate service.

A two-day planning conference was held between WSA officials and port representatives of the Administration's Atlantic Seaboard Recruitment and Manning Organization. One conclusion arived at was there are enough experienced men available, but how to get them back to sea is the problem.

Since Pearl Harbor, American shipyards have delivered more than 20 million deadweight tons of shipping and by next January we shall have built in two years the equivalent of more than a third of all the blue water merchant marine tonnage in the world before the war began.

'Support Prices' Get Backing At White House Farm Parley

By Christine Sadler
Post Staff Writer

Wide use of guaranteed "support prices" to farmers, mixed with sparing application of subsidies to hold down food prices to consumers, was seen as the Administration's food program yesterday by farm organization leaders invited to a White House conference with President Roosevelt and his agricultural and economic advisers.

"Some pretty substantial agreements" were reached, the farm leaders reported, indicating grounds for compromise may have been found in the controversial food-price problem, which consumed many days of angry debate in Congress before the recess.

Other food news yesterday included:

1. Announcement by the WFA and OPA that price ceilings soon would be placed on apples and a strict system for marketing this fruit worked out to insure supplies for military food purposes and for food processing plants.

2. The OPA brought fresh shrimp prices under control by placing ceilings on them. The new shrimp prices, OPA said, will be from 40 to 50 per cent below the 1942 averages.

Edward A. O'Neal, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, said last night he and the three other farm group leaders—Ezra T. Benson of the National Council of Farmer Cooperatives, Albert Goss of the National Grange, and James G. Patton of the National Farmers Union—would accompany War Food Administrator Marvin Jones to Capitol Hill soon to "stir up sentiment" for extending the life of the Commodity Credit Corporation.

Life of CCC to End Jan. 1

The CCC will expire January 1 unless Congress approves its extension, and is the agency which would manage finances for the price support program around which Jones has built his 1944 farm production plans.

All farm leaders approve price supports, and want them assured in a long-range plan that will guarantee the farmer a market in the uncertain postwar years. By shifting his farm program to the support-price basis, Jones is seen as having assured himself of the good will of the "farm bloc" and smoothing the way for future OPA price movements designed to hold down the cost of living.

With the exception of Patton, the farm group leaders have opposed the use of subsidies to keep down prices to consumers, but much of their opposition has been based on the idea subsidies roll back the prices to farmers. With prices to farmers guaranteed by the Government, consumer prices are no longer a farm problem.

O'Neal at the White House meeting told the President "rollback subsidies have not worked any better than we thought they would."

Representative Clifford Hope (Republican) of Kansas said farmers were bearing the brunt of the meat rollback decreed in June by the OPA and declared he thought the sentiment against subsidies would be just as strong in the next few months as it was before the recess.

More Jam Ordered For American Bread

To encourage the consumption of more bread, the OPA yesterday liberalized its ration rules to permit the manufacture of about 20 per cent more jams, jellies, preserves, and fruit butters than were on the market last year.

Effective October 1, all bread will be enriched by vitatmins "for the duration." The new bread, covered with jam, will "be almost a meal by itself," War Food Administration officials said.

Civilians Will Get Turkey Next Month

Turkeys will go on sale to civilians in October at prices no higher than those prevailing last Thanksgiving, OPA officials said yesterday.

Civilian sales of turkey have been prohibited during August and September, while the Army purchased 10 million pounds for shipment overseas.

War Frauds Trial Judge Resigns

By the Associated Press

South Bend, Ind., Sept. 1.—Judge Thomas W. Slick, 74, of the northern Indiana Federal District Court, submitted his resignation today to President Roosevelt because of ill health.

Judge Slick presided in the war fraud case against the Marion, Ind., plant of the Anaconda Copper Co. several months ago. Appointed in 1925 when the Northern Indiana District was instituted he has been its only judge.

The resignation is effective immediately, but Judge Slick will serve until a successor is named.

Guilt of Fraud

Newark, N. J., Sept. 15 (AP).—Russell W. Michener of Dumont, former treasurer of the Marine Maintenance Corp. of Bayonne, was sentenced by Federal Judge Thomas F. Meaney today to three years in prison on charges of defrauding the Government through overcharges for repairs to United States Maritime Service ships.

In addition, Michener was fined $5000.

Meaney then released Michener in $10,000 bail pending the outcome of an appeal now before the United States Circuit Court in Philadelphia.

Michener was convicted August 21 by a jury which acquitted Gregory Ferend, former president of the corporation, and the Bayonne concern of similar charges.

House Unit Adopts Kaiser Contract Formula

The House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds yesterday announced it would request Government procurement services to furnish records of conservation of manpower and use of women by companies having war housing and facilities contracts.

Action followed the appearance of Henry J. Kaiser, West Coast shipbuilder, before the committee in executive session. His plan to force manufacturers to vie with one another to save labor, rather than hoard it, by having Government procurement agencies place contracts on the basis of manpower records was revealed exclusively in The Washington Post yesterday.

Representative Lanham (Democrat) of Texas, committee chairman, in a statement issued late yesterday said:

"I have no doubt that the application of this new rating will have a favorable effect upon production and will accomplish a more equitable spread of business to the companies who can produce the goods at the least cost in man hours, time and money."

Signs Hospital Contract

At the same time, Kaiser disclosed he had signed a contract Tuesday with the Federal Works Agency for construction of a $1,200,000 hosptial addition in Oakland, Calif., for the prepaid medical care of the families of his 90,000 shipyard workers in nearby Richmond, Calif. The hospital facilities will be open to the public as well, Kaiser said. The FWA funds will be repaid in 20 years, and no outright Federal grant is included. Kaiser voiced the belief that his plan of prepaid medical care, if adopted throughout the industry, would bring about a 10 per cent gain in production by eliminating losses due to absenteeism, ill health and worry over family health problems.

After the hearing, the dynamic shipbuilder out of the West hammered away again at the manpower shortage and the necessity of employing women.

"In this war of survival the outstanding shortage is manpower," Kaiser asserted.

Shortage of Ships

"We have a shortage of ships. To meet it we need men. There are not enough men to fight and to build ships. Their places must be taken by women. The skills, the abilities and the strength of women in the manufacturing of ships are just being discovered. They are astounding. The women, of course, must adjust themselves to industrial processes, but more important the factories must readjust to this new type of manpower."

Employment of women, Kaiser warned, involves making proper arrangements for the care of minor children while mothers are at work. He asserted that his company, with the assistance of the Maritime Commission and the National Housing Agency, is constructing some child-care centers.

Operation Important Item

Location, maintenance and operation of these centers, Kaiser held, is more important than their construction because transportation, shopping and preparation of food are involved. The woman worker's home, her interest, and care of her children must be transferred nearer to the shipbuilding yard, Kaiser said.

"She must be assured that her children, to whose welfare the war is a threat, receive just as good care and protection as in her home when she is at work in the shipyard. Her steps between the stores, the markets and her home must be shortened. This the Kaiser Co. is attempting to do," the shipbuilder asserted.

Kaiser paid tribute to the Federal Works Agency, which he said, understood all the problems involved. He has asked FWA assistance in his problems, he said, with the objective of getting women into industry.

Draft Deferments

Selective Service authorities have classified government as one of the Nation's essential industries. Yet the Federal Government has shown less zeal than most employers for deferment of its key personnel from military service. As long ago as last December President Roosevelt ordered the cancellation of all deferments granted to Federal workers and instituted a rigorous system for the examination of further deferment requests. The effect of the President's policy was to deprive the civilian agencies of the Government of the services of many men whose aptitude and experience could not easily be replaced.

Generally speaking, there is no service more useful or more important in wartime than bearing arms in defense of one's country. There are services, however, which are indispensable to the support of the men who are bearing arms. The production of food and weapons is obviously among these. Certainly the orderly and efficient management of public affairs belongs among them, too. The question to be asked about the draft deferment policy of the Government, then, is whether it has been of such a nature as to impair the Government's vital functions. No individual can be considered, in the strict sense of the term, irreplaceable. But the replacement of a great many highly trained individuals within a single agency by men and women lacking in experience can produce a serious deterioration in efficiency.

Strenuous efforts are made to avoid such disruption of private industry essential to the war effort. Government agencies should have similar consideration. In other words, men who possess special skills should be kept in the civilian agencies of the Government if they are genuinely needed there and cannot be properly replaced—regardless of their age, marital status or paternity—just as they are kept in aircraft plants, radio stations or on farms.

It is reported that Judge Samuel Rosenman has been asked by the President to assume final determination of all deferment requests for Federal employes. It will not be a comfortable assignment. But he can render a service of great importance by assuring the public that Government employes are not being given special favors, and by courageously vindicating those young men who are selected to serve their Government in civilian attire.

Ration Money

The dated ration coupon system has been sharply criticized on the ground that it encourages people to buy and hoard articles that they do not need. To some extent this criticism is well founded. For some heedless people act as if the possession of a ration stamp makes it imperative to beat the ration deadline. Nevertheless, the dating of coupons has been a necessary feature of the rationing system, assuring comparatively orderly marketing of scarce supplies.

So long as every individual is permitted to purchase the same amount of rationed commodities as his fellow men, there is certain to be some hoarding and wasteful buying. Only by strictly adjusting the amount of purchases to individual needs would it be possible entirely to eliminate such wasteful practices. And the latter type of rationing would be impracticable on any extensive scale. Consequently, it has to be assumed that the majority of consumers will act as rational beings and not spend money needlessly.

Contrary to rumor, the present system of dated ration coupons will not be superseded when the OPA introduces its new ration or token money. But modifications made necessary by the use of ration money will greatly decrease the temptation to spend ration points within a limited period. While details of the new program have not yet been made public, it appears that ration stamps for meats and canned goods will continue to be dated. In fact, they will be valid only for designated weekly periods. But in place of a number of ration stamps of varying point values, a single stamp will represents a week's rations of meats or canned goods. When that stamp is turned in for rationed goods, the buyer will receive change in the form of the new ration money. These tokens will be good at any time—next week, or next month, or next year. Consequently, the feverish pressure to buy to the limit of a weekly or monthly ration allowance will no longer exist. The buyer may hoard his coupons and spend them when he gets ready.

Of course this new system is an experiment. If ration allowances should be much in excess of the amounts required by the great majority of the people, the ration tokens might accumulate and be dumped on the market at an inopportune time. Indeed, if rumors of impending shortages were to create fears that the tokens might not be honored, there would assuredly be "scarce" buying of an aggravated type. If worst came to worst, the token currency might have to be recalled. However, if rationed foods are available only in limited supply, there is little danger of such dire consequences. No change seems to be contemplated in the unit rationing systems applicable to sugar, shoes and gasoline, although the coupon dating practice has probably been responsible for more needless buying of such commodities than of meats and canned goods.

As a matter of fact, the new token currency has been devised primarily to relieve storekeepers from a vast amount of paper work. A ration book that might last only a few months, for instance, under the present system might be in use for several years under the new plan. Clerks and customers alike will also find the new system less complicated and time consuming. The greater leeway allowed consumers in planning the time of purchases will be an additional but only incidental advantage of the new system, provided all goes well.

Objectionable Rider

Congress, cooled by a summer recess, now has an opportunity to reconsider its action of early July barring three individuals, Messrs. Watson, Dodd and Lovett, from any Federal payroll. The reasons for reconsideration are set forth tersely and cogently in a special message by President Roosevelt, now made public. As the President told a press conference when he reluctantly signed the appropriation bill to which the objectionable rider had been attached, he considers it a bill of attainder and "an unwarranted encroachment upon the authority of both the executive and the judicial branches under our Constitution." This newspaper advanced the same contentions in discussing the rider prior to its enactment.

There is much more at stake here than the personal welfare of the three individuals whom Congress has sought to proscribe. A basic issue of civil rights is involved. And the tripartite division of power established by the Constitution has been called into question. It is altogether salutary, therefore, that Messrs. Watson, Dodd and Lovett have been retained in office and have secured legal counsel to bring court action, if necessary, to sustain their rights.

It would be better, however, if Congress itself would move to correct the injustice it has wrought. The congressional action was taken at a time of high feeling. It was a petty action, beneath the dignity of a great legislative body. The use of congressional power—we do not say authority—to punish particular persons because of their opinions is a pathetic travesty on the legislative function. It is within the power of Congress to repeal the Kerr amendment—an act of self-discipline which would surely enhance its stature and prestige.

Basic Blues

Basic English has been having a great boom since Mr. Churchill spoke up for it at Harvard as one means of promoting peace, harmony, good will and democracy throughout the world. President Roosevelt, Mr. Churchill disclosed, has much the same idea as himself of the virtues of basic English as an international common denominator. However, the reaction has not been unanimous applause and approval. The editors of the Commonweal, for example, appear slightly alarmed by Mr. Churchill's observation that it would be "a grand convenience for us all to be able to move freely about the world and to find everywhere a medium, albeit primitive, to intercourse and understanding." They fear that the Russians, the Chinese, and, above all, the Latin Americans may interpret this as a benevolent hint of a coming Anglo-American political and cultural domination.

But Mr. Churchill's notion seems to have been somewhat different. Besides democracy and free institutions, the English and American peoples have another wonderful possession, namely, the English language, which, he seems to think, it would be selfish not to pass on, with our other blessings, to the world at large. But as much might also be made for Spanish, French and certainly for Italian, which, like English, is the medium of one of the great universal poets, although none of these, of course, is as widely spoken now as is English.

One question which nobody appears to have considered is the fate of a language after it becomes a world tongue. What will happen to the idiom of Chaucer, Shakespeare and Milton after it has been pared down to about 850 words and with such modifications in syntax and grammar as may be necessary to make it equally comprehensible in Vladivostok and Valparaiso? The analogies that come to mind are not encouraging. The decline of Latin as a literary language seems to have been coincident with its rise as a world language. Greek, which, in the Hellenistic era, became something like a universal language, appears to have been saved from disintegration only by the advent of Latin as the official tongue.

Aramaic, which had supplanted nearly all the other Semitic languages, seems to have been the common tongue throughout the Near East by the first century A. D. and was spoken by Christ himself. Now there is only one tiny group of Aramaic-speaking people in a remote section of Iran. Arabic, once the official language of virtually the whole Moslem world, is still spoken by about 29 million persons, but seems to be rapidly losing ground.

Bureaucrats, as we believe Mr. A. P. Herbert has observed, are capable of destroying any language; of this truth Washington affords abundant evidence. Journalists, and especially headline writers, according to Mr. Belloc, are equally deadly. All of this seems to add up to a case in favor of Esperanto or Ido as the official world language. For if the bureaucrats destroy those languages, it will be no great loss to literature, whereas if English should be destroyed, that might be a calamity. For example, if there had been no English language for Mr. Churchill to speak, the history of this war might have been quite another story.

Papal Prisoner

Reports from Bern and elsewhere that German troops have violated yet another neutral state by occupying Vatican City are still unconfirmed but by no means incredible. If the reports are correct, Pope Pius XII and the resident members of the Sacred College have become hostages. Marshal Kesselring's purpose is as yet not clear. One conceivable motive might be that of forestalling a possible flight of the Pope from the Vatican on the theory that his enforced presence in Rome might make it awkward for the Allies to resume bombardment of communications in and near the city. Another purpose might be to suppress communication between the Vatican and the outside world and so prevent the Pontiff from speaking again in the name of the war-sick European peoples as he spoke on the eve of the Badoglio armistice. Again there may be the hope that, through pressures and threats, the Pope may be persuaded to recognize and approve the suddenly resuscitated Fascist regime. Finally, the purpose may be to secure the person of the Pontiff so that, when and if a withdrawal from Rome becomes strategically necessary, he may be taken along with the German armies.

The one clear thing is that the purpose, whatever it may be, is mainly political and propagandistic rather than military. It can scarcely be that the Germans seriously expect the Allies to consider Rome an open city, but it may well be that they are looking forward to the repercussions that further bombardments might have in the United States and Latin America. Nor is it entirely unthinkable that the Pope might even be taken in captivity to Berlin so that further bombardments of that capital could be used as a pretext for a cry that he was in personal danger. Or again an effort by the Nazis to seize the role of protectors of the papacy from some real or supposed revolutionary ferment in Italy might represent a desperate measure to regain the support of the still very numerous German Catholics who are thought to represent the principal remaining focus of opposition to the regime. On the other hand, with the Vatican situated between two embattled armies, the creation of a mystery surrounding the whereabouts and fate of the Pontiff might throw the whole Catholic world into confusion, which would certainly distract attention from the war itself. Judging from the history of Nazi propaganda, nothing is so fantastic as to be utterly implausible.

Ersatz Mussolini

There was always something distinctly synthetic about Benito Mussolini. The strutting walk, the jutting jaw, the theatrical gestures, the mouth-filling phrases that were so full of sound and so empty of content—all these were part of the trappings which Mussolini had so as to appear to be what he was not. But the Mussolini that Adolf Hitler has ostensibly salvaged from the dustbin, brushed off and placed at the head of a new Fascist Italian government, is ersatz of ersatz.

As a matter of fact, it is not at all clear that Mussolini is still actually alive. Neutral Europe is alive with rumors that the late Duce shuffled off this mortal coil some time between his resignation on July 25 and the Italian surrender six weeks later and that Hitler is merely using his name. But there is no magic in Mussolini's name to the Italians of this generation. Nor would Mussolini, if actually alive, be able to restore the shattered edifice of his fortunes. The attempt by Hitler to re-create the Axis that was is not likely to get very far. That egg has been scrambled and cannot be unscrambled. Unlike Napoleon, the sawdust Caesar of our time has no chance of a return from Elba.

ONGOING

White fog, and gray grief;
The lonely road and the dead leaf;
Though near at hand, uncertain, gleam
The lighted windows of a dream,
And somewhere, not so far behind
Another soul gropes tired and blind;
Though doors may open, light stream out,
Though distant voices thin and clear
Cry welcome as you pass them by,
Your resting place is not yet here!

But higher, farther, just ahead,
Under the stars you cannot see
The great gold portals wait your knock,
The footfall of your victory.
Though others tarry, stay not you:
Remember how your towers were tall,
How in your halls the wine was sweet.
Keep the high vision! but awhile
The loneliness, the bitter knell,—
Suddenly, through the darkness loom
The white walls of your citadel!

America At War

By Selden Menefee

The Men Overseas

What our front-line soldiers are thinking has been the subject of much speculation. This week I heard first-hand reports from two American officers just back from North Africa and Sicily, who were in a position to know how the boys feel about things.

Both men agreed that most of the boys in the Mediterranean battle zone are fighting for one thing: to get the European war over as soon as possible, so they can take "a crack at the Japs" and then go home.

America, to the boys at the front, has grown to be almost a Utopia. They remember the pleasantest of their prewar days and compare them with Army hardships and conditions in the countries where they are fighting.

Griping Not Serious

They gripe when their food supplies are short, and "beef" about life in Africa and Sicily. But this does not hamper their fighting effectiveness in the least. Fortunately, they think that we are sacrificing greatly for them here at home. They joke about it—"Those poor guys can't even get a second cup of coffee"—but some of them worry about how their families are making out under rationing regulations.

The famous report in Stars and Stripes last June that almost 90 per cent of the boys were bitter about the coal strike and wanted drastic Government action against the strikers was, if anything, an understatement of the men's attitudes. "Why should the miners strike for $9 a day, when we're out here fighting for our soup and beans?" they ask.

The President's recent proposals for guaranteeing the livelihood of veterans and their families during the postwar transition period gave the fighting men a real "lift," according to my informants. They are more seriously concerned about what will happen at home when the war is over than they are about the problem of international organizations for permanent peace.

Here, roughly, is how the boys feel about the nationalities they are fighting against—and with:

ITALIANS: Pity was the predominant feeling for the Italians, who had no desire to continue fighting for Hitler. In Sicily our boys were so warmly received that they were almost embarrassed. Sicilian peasants wined and dined them when our planes were shot down behind the enemy lines, and guarded them against capture by the Germans until our Army arrived. "Makes you feel like when a dog you've kicked around comes back to make friends with you," one soldier said.

GERMANS: Our fighting men hate the "Jerries" during and just after battles because of the Nazis' cruel tactics—particularly their planting of land mines. But once German soldiers are captured, Americans tend to like them because they are well disciplined, clean, and usually know at least a little English. Real hatred is reserved for the Japanese.

BRITISH: Americans often fail to get along well with British soldiers upon short acquaintance. The two groups are so similar that minor differences sometimes grate on their nerves. But once they have gone through a battle or two together, they become bosom buddies. Our men like and respect them for their courage under fire.

NORTH AFRICANS: Our soldiers have developed an unfortunate dislike for the "Wogs," as they call the Arabic peoples of North Africa. (The nickname is taken from the term "Western Oriental gentlemen," which appears in British soldiers' manuals.) The Arab merchants seem to think that all Americans are millionaires and exploit them at every turn. One typical trick of small Arab shoeshine boys is slyly to throw dirt on clean shoes, then offer to shine them.

Feeling between Negro and white troops overseas is good on the whole. Negroes report that Southerners, although often condescending, are more friendly to them than Northern whites. The Negroes are respected for their fighting qualities by those who have been with them under fire.

Political Training

Our men are less aware of the issues involved in the war than are the soldiers of our allies. Political "orientation" training has not been very successful in our Army; its compulsory nature is resented, and most of it is over the head of the average enlisted man.

More informal discussion of political topics, optional movies, and popular lectures are needed if our soldiers are to know what they are fighting for, as do the British and the Russians. The Army is moving in this direction, with the inauguration of discussion forums in our Army camps throughout the world next month.

On Postwar Policy

By Barnet Nover

The Foundations Have Been Laid

IT IS A CURIOUS FACT that so much of the present discussion on the subject of America's postwar international policy is taking place in what can only be described as an artificially created vacuum.

Take, for example, the question whether or not the United States should continue its present military alliance with Great Britain after the war, thus bringing about a pooling of forces which, since the Peace of Ghent in 1814, have, broadly speaking, operated along parallel lines.

Leaving out the unreconciled and unrepentant isolationists who still insist that, after the victory has been won, the United States should again go its solitary way—they are now a rapidly diminishing m i n o rity—opinion on this question of an Anglo-American alliance divides roughly into four categories.

THERE ARE, in the first place, those who favor it without any ifs, ands and buts, who believe that Great Britain and the United States alone can keep the world at peace.

There are those who argue, in the words of Woodrow Wilson, that the United States should "join no combination of power which is not the combination of all of us."

There are those who insist that an Anglo-American alliance would hasten rather than diminish the possibility of another world war by stimulating the creation of counter-alliances. This group would favor the inclusion of Russia and China and perhaps other powers in any postwar coalition.

And there are those who want such an alliance to be not an end in itself, but only the foundation stone of a collective system of security.

IF THIS DISCUSSION is not continually to go off the deep end it must be related to existing realities. What are these realities?

First of all, there is the fact to be taken into account that in 1940, in an exchange for 50 over-age destroyers, the United States acquired on 99 year lease certain naval and air bases located on territory which is British.

As in the past, Great Britain will continue to exercise sovereignty over those islands. But by the act of establishing American bases upon them we ipso facto assumed the obligation of defending them.

The arrangement, in other words, constitutes an alliance in fact, as much of an alliance as the alliance we have with the Republic of Panama. In both instances, as it happens, the dominant motive is the same—the defense of the Panama Canal.

IN THE PAST the defense of the Canal as well as the defense of continental United States was predominantly a naval matter.

In the future the factor of air power will increasingly have to be reckoned with. This means that the perimeter of our defenses will either by annexation or through arrangements with friendly powers have to be greatly extended both to the East and to the West.

This may involve an arrangement with France concerning Dakar, an arrangement with Great Britain concerning the future role of that country as an unsinkable aircraft carrier, a role whose importance in this war Americans have learned to appreciate. It may also involve an arrangement with the Netherlands regarding the use of possible bases in the East Indies, and so on.

In every instance the alternative to imperialist annexation involves military agreements tantamount to an alliance.

A SECOND POINT to take into account is that Great Britain is already an ally of Russia through the Anglo-Russian agreement of 1941, a partner in that remarkable group known as the British Commonwealth of Nations, an ally of Turkey and of Portugal.

That being the case, an Anglo-American alliance could not, on the face of it, be an exclusive combination. For it is an axiom of diplomacy that the friends of friends are friends.

In other words, if we made an alliance with Great Britain, such an alliance would automatically include Russia in the combination. There is no reason why it should not also include other powers, such as China and France.

AS A MATTER of fact there is no particular reason why any alliances we may make with Great Britain or other nations could not be fitted into the broader framework of a universal system of peace enforcement.

In this respect there is much we can learn from the past.

When Woodrow Wilson returned from Paris in 1919 he carried with him the Treaty of Versailles which included the Covenant of the League of Nations and also a tripartite treaty under which Great Britain and the United States promised to come to France's aid should France be again the object of German aggression.

Wilson was not very enthusiastic about that treaty. He had signed it under pressure. But the French insisted on it because they were not convinced that the Covenant alone would suffice to defend them.

History has justified them. In retrospect it is clear that had the tripartite treaty gone into effect not only would the present war have been averted but the League would in the meantime have been strengthened.

By the same token, any arrangement we may make with Great Britain after this war should serve to strengthen rather than weaken the international order. Separate alliances and a world league need not be mutually exclusive.

Dairyman's Plight

If the public generally, including some who write items for The Post, understood what it means to produce the food they eat, there would not be the present howl about the high cost of living.

Do you realize, good citizens of Washington, that the dairyman who produces the milk you enjoy is losing money on that milk? Also, he is giving his time for nothing. Would you do that for the farmer?

The dairyman works long hours, takes man, risks and expects little profit in winter, since he must feed heavily. But in summer, on lush pastures, the cows produce without extra food, so he can make a profit.

This year, owing to the severe drought, there are no pastures. The dairyman is feeding his winter supply of feed right now and he is paying 100 per cent more for feed, while labor and all other expenses have risen tremendously. Yet, he receives for his milk less than a cent a quart more than in times of cheap feed, lower-priced and more efficient labor.

Does this strike you Washingtonians—and dwellers in other cities—as an equable arrangement? The farmer feels the high cost of living as well as you, but you have a salary, an income or other means of support, while he must borrow or go under.

If we borrow to buy feed for our cows, we will spend the rest of our lives trying to pay off the debt. Too many dairymen have fallen into that error, and very many lost their farms as a result.

One alternative is to butcher part of the herd (a hideous loss to the breeder). Another is to give up his herd altogether, scrap his life's work and look about for other means of support. The third is for the public to realize his plight and pay an adequate price for milk. It pays the higher price for other foods—only too glad to be able to buy them. It pays gladly for its clothes (though the old ones would probably do; the farmer makes them do), and it pays freely for its pleasures. Why not for its most vital food—milk?

How about it, city brother?

Senator Reynolds

Senator Robert Reynolds, we read, is demanding that the Army "prove the need" to his military committee before it drafts more fathers.

Back in the days of peace, Reynold demanded the Army "prove the need" of giving defenses to Guam. To his mind, equipping Guam might offend the Mikado. From the Rape of Poland to Pearl Harbor, he held that the "need" had not been proved of sending munitions to blitzed England, of extending lend-lease, of continuing the National Guard in service, of arming our merchantmen. Reynold's record in the present war is frankly told in "Under Cover."

Although made chairman of the Senate Military Affairs Committee by the rule of seniority over the opposition of the liberal minds of that body, Reynolds' qualifications for the post remain obscure. His self-written biography in the Congressional Directory maintains a noisy silence as to what he did in the last war.

Some of the loudest "demanders" in Congress are the Pearl Harbor converts who, if defeated in the coming elections, would be as politically buried and forgotten as the once vociferous Rush Holt.

Noncombatant Jobs

The Army has many jobs both here and abroad that are strictly noncombatant. To fill these jobs the Army has tried to recruit about 150,000 women, but the most they could get was but 65,000, and even that number was somewhat lessened when the WAAC was inducted into the Army.

Now I am suggesting using many single men who have been rejected as 4-F because of some slight defect, such as poor vision or hernia.

After all, these jobs must be filled. The Army is now using able-bodied men at these jobs when they can be of much more service out in the field. Why not leave the family men at home, where the preservation of the American family is so important? 4-F.

Epitaphs

O'er Italy
Oh, shed a tear:
The worst of her
Is buried here!

* * * *

Then dry your eyes
The best of her
Is surely not.

* * * *

Sleep gently as
In days of yore;
That strut and scowl
And now no more.

* * * *

Ah, Romans, rest
In these green spaces:
No fat guy now
At you makes faces.

* * * *

Sleep undisturbed
And in good cheer;
No pompous mugg
Can reach you here.

* * * *

Pause, passerby,
And drop a flow'r;
At last Rome's got
A quiet hour.

* * * *

Oh death where is Thy sting when it
Means any color
Shirts that fit!

* * * *

And Some for Benito

"The world is mine"——
You heard his cries;
He must have meant
Two other guys!

"No nonsense will
I take," he cried;
But had to take it
Far and wide.

"Wear blackshirts!"
Was his firm, stout call;
He wound up with
No shirt at all.

The moral's this
As each man passes:
Time takes its toll
Of pompous asses.

Italian sections of New York took the surrender calmly, but, strange as it may seem, the cloak and suit center put on a tumultuous celebration that rocked the district. Maybe the boys down there took too literally a lyrical war correspondent's declaration that Italy was putting on the "garments" of repentance.

The armistice was signed five days before it was announced. The play was a delayed pass with Hitler expecting a straight plunge at the center of the line.

New Products

The inventive genius and inherent technological skills of the American people have brought about a turn of events that definitely promises a new era of industrial achievement, with its resultant increase in our standards of living. For Science, which is now playing an all-important role in winning the war, has also entered the realm of production of everyday consumer goods.

A bewildering array of new and improved products await only the conversion of productive facilities to civilian needs and the acquisition of an ample supply of raw materials.

This correspondent strongly urges that postwar "planning" of generalities and specious declarations of postwar domestic policy be supplanted, or at least supplemented, by governmental or private committees whose primary objective will be research. Research conducted by recognized authorities in their respective fields. Research whose paramount function will be the creation of new products, or development of new improvements on present items that will enable the less progressive industries to maintain the same degree of competition that led to our present system of mass production, quality of craftsmanship and moderate cost.

Laugh In Private

Correct me if I am wrong, but it does seem bad form to me for persons of importance to allow themselves to become hilarious in public places when boys of all nations are being killed or wounded on all fronts.

It causes a revulsion of feeling within me akin to sea sickness to see newspaper pictures of persons who ought to know better, nearly dying a-laughing at a time like this.

If they can feel like laughing so heartily then it will be better for the morale of all parties concerned if they can manage to do so in private. Some of us may get the idea that they can be hurt only by that which happens to injure their own particular hides.

Today And Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

The State Department Trouble

THE TROUBLES of the State Department are best understood and can be most surely overcome if we realize that they are growing pains. It is an old established department. Its conversion, expansion, and rejuvenation to meet the demands of war have been difficult. Yet they are necessary. For events are at a phase where diplomacy is an integral part of the strategy of war. The turmoil within and about the department during the past few months is the outward result of delay in facing the problems of bringing the State Department up to the demands upon it.

LIPPMANN

We shall do well to fix our attention on this, and not let ourselves become distracted by irrelevant and uninformed charges and countercharges in regard to "ideology." They produce heat without light and noise without meaning.

THE STORY of the State Department is that of so many other old departments. It was not ready for war of this scope and complexity, and instead of reorganizing the department at the outset—as he did the War Department when he brought in Secretary Stimson—the President farmed out the conduct of foreign relations to a large number of other agencies—most of them new, improvised for the emergency, and inexperienced in the ways of government.

At the time when the President created the Board of Economic Warfare, the State Department had neither the organization nor the men for this novel kind of operation. The same was true of relief, of foreign propaganda, of strategic intelligence service, and of finance. In theory they should all have been set up under the guidance of the Department of State. In fact, there was a vacuum in the department which had to be filled somehow because the needs of the war could not wait.

MUCH GOOD, though unadvertised, work has been done by these improvised agencies: they have brought fresh energy, energetic will, new brains, and many able men, into a field which in time of peace has not attracted a sufficient variety of talent. But they also brought in many unseasoned, half-baked, undisciplined amateurs who have caused headaches in Washington and abroad. Ultimately, the system of parceling out foreign affairs in many agencies could not work when the time came, as it has now come, to act right behind the fighting fronts and in the stress of war.

Unity of direction and clarity and coherence in policy have become urgently necessary. The country must have one foreign policy. It cannot have several foreign policies.

YET IT IS EASIER to ask for these things than to achieve them. For it is easy enough to gather up all the improvised agencies and by new overriding directives put them under the State Department. But that is not in itself a solution unless and until the department itself is made capable of exercising the new vast complex powers entrusted to it.

We cannot, therefore, avoid examining the inner and directing core of the department itself. For it is there that the choices and decisions must finally be formulated which, after they have been laid before the President, then control all the operations at home and abroad.

THAT THIS is the problem is admitted by everyone, I think, and clearly demonstrated by the Hull-Welles affair. In the inner core of the department there has existed for some years the problem of how to bring it up from the routine of peace to the complex imperatives of this gigantic war.

Now the fact is that Mr. Hull became Secretary of State at the age of 61, and that unlike Secretary Stimson, who is older, he had had no previous experience in the office he assumed. He was and is an honorable public servant But his life had been spent in domestic affairs and domestic politics, where among other things he had learned to understand the tariff so well. Now the plain fact is that after 60 it is extremely unlikely that any man can master a new field like foreign affairs. That was undoubtedly the reason why inevitably the President turned for advice and help in the actual conduct of diplomacy to Mr. Welles, and to other officials of the department who were versed in foreign affairs.

THAT STILL LEFT to Mr. Hull a very great and necessary work to do, and he did it very well indeed. He has been the connecting link between the Administration and Congress, and he has been the political conscience, counselor, and trusted advocate of the President's policy here at home. But he has never been the effective administrative and operating head in foreign relations, a task for which he has neither the technical qualifications nor the temperament.

It is, therefore, a disservice to Mr. Hull to push him, by misguided adulation, into a position where he would have to bear the responsibility of forming and conducting foreign policy. The right course, on which the harmonious reorganization of the department depends, is to persuade him to do in the State Department what Mr. Stimson has done in the War Department—to bring into it new men, young blood, men of the character of Patterson, McCloy, and Lovett—and not to make the grievous mistake of forgetting that he is an elder statesman, with all the usefulness and the limitations that that implies.

IN SHORT, it is necessary to bring under the State Department the control of all our foreign civil activities. But that control can be exercised only if at the same time there is brought into the State Department, in addition to the many able men already there, a new draft of high talent.

Then the department will pass out of its time of troubles, and be restored in the esteem and confidence of the Nation.

Doctors Hail Effectiveness Of Latest Sulfa Treatment

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Sept. 15.—Physicians have found what appears to be the best of all sulfa drugs, one that is effective as others in treating a wide variety of ailment., but causes fewer bad reactions, medical reports said today.

Sulfamerazine, one of the latest additions to the sulfanilamide group, is the drug that may be the answer to medical science's search for an effective sulfonamide that provokes less toxic or poisonous after-affects.

Dr. Wendell H. Hall and Dr. Wesley W. Spink of Minneapolis, describing treatment of 116 patients, reported in the Journal of the American Medical Association that in a large number of cases sulfamerazine was as effective as sulfadiazine, one of the best sulfonamides.

Sulfamerazine caused less nausea than sulfapyridine, they said, and was no more toxic and caused fewer skin eruptions and instances of drug fever than sudfathiazole.

In another report, Drs. Mark H. Lepper, Lewis K. Sweet and Harry F. Dowling of Washington, D. C., said sulfamerzarine apparently was as good in treating meningitis as sulfadiazine.

They said that with them, however, the drug seemed "slightly more toxic, but the difference is not great."

U. S. Foreign Policy

Shield Of The Republic

By WALTER LIPPMANN

"No Entangling Alliances"

The hard core of resistance to the formation of foreign policy has been the popular objection to alliances. This prejudice rests, so most of us were brought up to believe, upon the teachings of the Founding Fathers of the Republic.

Yet as a matter of fact the Founding Fathers did not hold the prejudice against alliances which latter-day Americans have ascribed to them. The record of their words and their acts shows that whenever they thought it would serve the national interest to have the support of allies, they were only too pleased to have allies. In the War of Independence Washington rejoiced when Franklin succeeded with Vergennes in making an ally of the King of France. In the great affair of the Louisiana Purchase, Jefferson did not shrink from accepting the diplomatic encouragement of Britain. And finally, in the last great act in foreign relations which was determined by the Founding Fathers of the Republic, in the preparation of the Monroe Doctrine, they made their decision after negotiations in London by which they were assured of the armed diplomatic support of Great Britain.

How then did we come to think that alliances were contrary to the example of the Founding Fathers, and therefore alien to the purest American tradition? I believe that the reason is simple. For 75 years after the adoption of the Monroe Doctrine, the unavowed but none the less actual British-American community of interest which supported it worked on the whole so well that, as with the air we breathe or our stomachs when they are in good order, we were unconscious of the implied alliance. Thus American historians and American statesmen lacked the incentive to make clear the true history of the foreign policy of the Founding Fathers, and a few passages, torn from their context and then misread, were treated as the Holy Writ of American tradition.

Washington was, it is true, opposed to "permanent alliances." But we have to remember that when he spoke in 1796 the United States had only a commitment to defend the French West Indian colonies under the treaty of alliance of 1778. Washington did not regard this commitment, which lapsed a few years later, as permanent. It was only 30 years later that the United States made a permanent foreign commitment which covered the whole of the Western Hemisphere. Perhaps Washington would have opposed the commitment. But if he had agreed, can we in justice to him be sure that he would have made a permanent commitment of such gravity without making certain that the only effective way of making it good was no less permanently assured?

The celebrated injunction to seek "honest friendship with all nations, entangling alliances with none" comes from Jefferson's first inaugural. It is no less clear that Jefferson, like Washington, had no dogmatic prejudice against alliances as such. For, where an American interest, as he conceived it, was at stake, he sought as a matter of course for the appropriate ally. On April 18, 1802, 13 months after uttering the words about entangling alliances, we find President Jefferson writing to Robert R. Livingston, the American Minister in Paris, about the cession of Louisiana by Spain to France: "The day that France takes possession of New Orleans . . . seals the union of two nations, who, in conjunction, can maintain exclusive possession of the ocean. From that moment we must marry ourselves to the British fleet and nation."

Jefferson's conviction that the defense of American interests in the Western Hemisphere was closely related to an alliance with British sea power stayed with him to the end of his days. President Monroe consulted Jefferson about making the commitment of the Monroe Doctrine.

Jefferson replied to the President that "the question presented by the letters you have sent me is the most momentous which has ever been offered to my contemplation since that of independence. That made us a nation, this sets our compass and points the course which we are to steer through the ocean of time opening on us." He advised the President to make what Monroe had called "a concert by agreement" with Great Britain, saying "Great Britain is the nation which can do us the most harm of any one, or all on earth; and with her on our side, we need not fear the whole world." Madison, who was also consulted by President Monroe, took the same view.

Thus the objection of latter-day Americans to alliances is not based on the authority of the Founders of the Republic. It rests on an obscuration of the words, the acts, and the explicit beliefs of Washington, Jefferson, Madison and Monroe. We may add that the concert by agreement, which in 1823 three of the early Presidents united in taking as the premise of their greatest commitment, was so successful that later generations thought the beneficent results were due to the nature of things—for example, to the width of the ocean—and not to an act of highest statesmanship. The Anglo-American concert conferred such enormous benefits in keeping two continents free of imperialism and of war, and for so long exacted no payment in return, that in our times men have refused to recognize, because events did not compel them to recognize, that the effective substance of an alliance with Britain was the cardinal element in American foreign relations.

Pay Action Fight Seen

Action in Congress

Congress will fight to see that its decision ousting three Federal employes as "subversive" is upheld in the Court of Claims when the case goes there, informed members predicted yesterday.

Under the terms of an appropriation rider the three employes will go unpaid after November 15, unless by then the President nominates them for their present jobs and the Senate confirms them.

They plan to remain at work after November 15 to sue in the Court of Claims for their salaries. The three are Goodwin B. Watson and William E. Dodd, jr., employed in the Federal Communications Commission, and William Morss Lovett, secretary of the Virgin Islands.

Congress Is Concerned

Some Congressmen, it was learned, are concerned over this legal dilemma.

They see the fight as a test of power between the legislative and executive branches. Yet when the employes of the executive branch sue in the Court of Claims, the Government's defense would be presented by the Justice Department, also part of the executive branch.

The "extraordinary action" being studied by some members is to hire a lawyer to represent the side of Congress as "amicus curiae."

The next move of Congress in the fight may be charted next week, when Representative Kerr (Democrat) of North Carolina and other members of the House Appropriations Subcommittee which originally recommended the ouster return.

Challenge By Dies

Chairman Dies (Democrat) of Texas, of the House Committee on Un-American Activities, accused President Roosevelt of seeking support of the "left-wing group" by opposing the ouster of the three men, and challenged the Chief Executive to "take to the people the issue of whether men who don't believe in our form of Government should be allowed to stay on the Government payroll."

President Roosevelt on Tuesday sent a message to Congress terming congressional action in voting the ouster an illegal encroachment on the powers of the executive and judicial branches, and saying he did not consider it binding. Dies said the President's stand "smacks of dictatorship."

24-Hour Trip Seen To South America

Miami Beach, Fla., Sept. 15 (AP).—Twenty-four hour service to the farthest points in South America will be commonplace in the era of mass air transportation that will follow the war, Juan Trippe, president of Pan American Airways System, predicted today.

Trippe, here for the dedication of a new maintenance and office building at the Pan American airport, envisioned in an interview clippers with three times the present capacity speeding through the stratosphere to bring Buenos Aires within 23 hours of Miami, Rio de Janiero within 21.

Veteran Tells Marines' Formula for Battle

(This is the fifth in a series of stories about sailor heroes at the Naval Medical Center in Bethesda, Md.)

"We're not out there to die for our country, but to make sure that the Japs die for theirs."

Sergt. Frank S. Veltri, 27, of 3239 E st. ne., now serving his fifth year with the Marines, made it clear that this observation about our South Pacific war is a quote from somebody else, but, as he said, "It's the way we felt about it on Guadalcanal."

VELTRI

Veltri was in charge of unloading the nights of August 8 and 9, 1942, when the Tokyo Express came rolling in from the moonlighted west and was sent reeling back to Tokyo in the great sea battle that saw the Australian cruiser Canberra and the American cruisers Astoria, Quincy and Vincennes sunk.

A realistic-minded man is Sergeant Veltri.

He thinks that this hero business "is a lot of malarkey, which doesn't mean, of course, that there aren't any heroes."

So, we'll take him at his word when he says that he's no hero and just put down the story of a sergeant of the Marines, who practiced keeping out of trouble in order to make trouble for the Japs.

A Sergeant of Marines

And then we have the picture of the kind of a guy who makes the Marine Corps a great fighting institution. That guy is the Marine Corps sergeant. He goes in at one end of the corps processing formula as a green recruit. He comes out the other as a skilled professional soldier, smartly educated in the tricks of combat, a cautious conservative fellow who knows how to use his destructive tools, but who knows, too, that the worst kind of fighters and the poorest heroes are dead ones, with nothing meant, at all, to diminish the light of sacrifices made by any and all of the brave who fought and died for America.

He is the sort of man who, like Sergeant Veltri, stays in the heaviest action protecting himself and his charges and "dressing them down" when, made fighting mad as they were on Guadalcanal, they throw caution aside and try to win a battle by themselves alone.

Teamwork Wins

"Battles are won by unit teamwork," he said, "and personally I stick to the formula by which battles are won. And that is to see that individual soldiers are trained to act individually, to know what is required and know how to do what is required. But individualism doesn't mean fighting a battle according to one's own idea. It means being able to carry on objectively if separated from the main body during an attack and to be able to assume command if all other leaders are out of action."

Veltri took his platoon through all of the small and large scale attacks made by the Japs in their efforts to recapture Henderson Field.

"We fought them all over the island, and few of my platoon were injured. Of course, we lost men on Guadalcanal, but my platoon, like all the others, never was caught flat-footed. Noncommissioned and commissioned men alike feel a great responsibility for those under our command. And while there were plenty of times some of these kids in the heat of their rage were tempted to take a chance we verbally boxed their ears. Like this business of getting so mad and standing up to use an automatic rifle against an onrushing bunch of yellow fanatics. We'd stop that quick when it happened, even if it meant cuffing a kid around a bit. That stuff's all right for Japs, but it ain't Marine. The proof of that is that we have Guadalcanal and the Japs haven't got it, although they've tried with all they had to get it."

On Eve of an Attack

We can see this Veltri, who is no hero, on the eve of an attack, a typical Marine sergeant who follows the four elements of the corps prebattle formula and never forgets the fifth.

The battle is a few hours in the offing. Veltri has his orders, and he is back with his young charges. He checks on their ammunition, seeing to it that they get extra cartridges and grenades as "a margin of safety for them and destruction for the Japs." Have they enough rations and of the right kind for the test ahead of them? He sees to that. Can this boy who had complained of sore feet undertake a strenuous jungle march? Is this man verging on battle exhaustion?

"Conserve men is a watchword with us," Veltri said. "We want to get the boys back home where they belong. It would be wrong to send a lad into action who is not up to battle par. It's as important to victory to protect the temporarily unfit as it is to see to it that the fit are made ready to go."

Before the battle the Marine commanders "brief" their noncoms as thoroughly as the air forces do their pilots. The noncoms then brief their platoons.

"We let them know what is about to be done. They are told what is expected of them, given all possible information about enemy positions, the terrain and, subject to changing fortunes of the fight, the method by which the fight is to be carried out.

"Then," said Sergt. Veltri, "we are ready for the worst any opponent can throw our way."

Fifth Element in a Fight

The fifth element is . . .

"For non-coms to stay in there with their boys, watching them all the time to see they take no needless risks, backing them up in tough spots—the same as officers do . . . That makes a Marine a great land and sea fighter who, in turn, makes the Marine Corps a tough proposition to buck against."

"There's nothing heroic in this sort of thing," Sergt. Veltri contends, "but it wins battles. And winning battles is what brings victory."

Of course, he admits, does this husky chap, that maybe there is a sort of heroism in rescuing some wounded youngsters from an exposed position, but, "what the hell. If you gave a medal every time a Marine or any other fighting man did this for a buddy, we'd lose the war because we'd run out of metal making medals."

Personally, he says, he believes in taking it easy, just be cautious and kill Japs.

Yanks Trained to Live

"They're the ones who have been trained to die for their country and we like to accommodate them. American troops have been trained to live for theirs."

After going through the island campaigns from the initial invasion to December last year, Sergeant Veltri, receiving no wounds but getting his Japs, fell victim to malaria. He came back to renew acquaintances with Joan, a daughter who was a month old when he left for Pacific war outposts, and his wife, Dorothy Louise.

"There it is," he finishes, "now what the hell kind of a yarn can you write about that?"

Evening Schools to Feature Instruction in War Work

Studies to prepare students for war jobs will be featured in night classes for white high school students opening Monday, September 20, E. J. Lockwood, director of evening schools, announced yesterday. Sessions will be held Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays.

Radio, science, aviation, mathematics, and shop courses as well as business subjects will be taught at Abbot, Central, Hine, McKinley and Roosevelt.

In addition, academic classes in English and social studies will be offered as well as home economics, health education, music and languages.

Aviation classes will learn preflight aeronautics at Central High. Fundamentals of electricity and radio will be available at Central, radio code at Roosevelt and Central, and radio repair at Abbot.

Health education and personality problems will be taught at Central and voice also will be offered at that school.

Central will offer commercial art, and McKinley will offer machine shop instruction and mechanical drawing.

Shop classes are limited to those employed in the trade, except for architectural drafting, commercial art, machine shop instruction and mechanical drawing.

1944 Tax Bill Hearings Postponed

By Edward Ryan
Post Staff Writer

House tax leaders last night dropped their plans to start hearings on a new revenue bill Monday, as Senator George (Democrat) of Georgia disclosed that Congressional experts are drafting a plan to consolidate the present Victory and normal taxes.

George, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, told reporters he had asked Colin F. Stam, head of the Joint Congressional tax staff, to prepare recommendations for combining the 5 per cent Victory levy and the 6 per cent normal tax into a new wartime normal tax of 10 per cent. The plan might mean an accompanying decrease in exemptions, he said.

The basic Victory tax exemption is $624 a year, while the income tax exemptions are $500 for a single person and $1200 for married.

November 1 Goal

Senator George said that present plans call for the House to complete its action on a tax bill and send the measure to the Senate by November 1.

When the House would make a start at writing its bill was uncertain. Representative Doughton (Democrat) of North Carolina, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, said that the hearings scheduled for Monday had been called off, and that the committee will have to decide next week when it wants to make its start.

At the same time, Doughton said that the committee, at a closed night meeting, failed to reach a decision on simplifying tax returns, but would continue working on the problem with the idea of making some changes before March 15 next year.

Simplification Urged

Senator George said that he had protested to the treasury that its recommended income tax blank for next March 15 was too complicated, and had suggested it be simplified.

He said he also had recommended that the second windfall provision of the pay-as-you-go tax law now in effect be eliminated because it would add little revenue, and have an unjust effect on many taxpayers. The proviso applies a special "windfall tax" to the income of 1942 or 1943, whichever was lower, if it exceeds the income of a base year between 1936 and 1940 by $20,000 or more.

The shifts in tax plans were disclosed after George and Doughton conferred with President Roosevelt and Administration tax leaders. Doughton said that inability of the Capitol and Treasury staffs to complete their plans and figures was responsible for delaying the start of tax hearings.

Announcement of the delay in starting House hearings brought a charge from Representative Daniel A. Reed (Republican) of New York, that "President Roosevelt has once more muddied the tax waters."

Utmost Speed Necessary

Reed said that unless Congress works with the utmost speed the new taxes cannot become effective next January 1, adding he favors "going ahead with the bill without waiting for Administration proposals."

Doughton, in announcing the delay in hearings, said "not much time will be lost."

"We must have a new tax bill by January 1 if we have to work nights to get it," he said.

Pennsylvania Drys Gain New Areas in Vote

Philadelphia, Sept. 15 (AP).—The drys claimed new territory in Pennsylvania and relinquished relatively little today after a series of local option referenda, high point of the State's primary election balloting yesterday.

Returns from 63 of the 78 referenda held showed that 13 wet territories voted against the sale of liquor and 13 against beer while 36 voted to continue beer and 31 to continue liquor.

Three dry regions voted to permit sales of beer, although none favored liquor. Four others voted against beer and six against liquor.

Paving Union Merger Hailed As War Aid

Cooperation between CIO and AFL trade-unions in the paving industry in Washington has been achieved as a major step toward higher labor standards and improved war production, Willy Arnheim, acting president of the AFL Paving Council for the District, announced yesterday.

Final steps have been taken to carry out the unification of these unions by an amalgamation with the AFL body of CIO's United Paving and Building Supply Workers Local Industrial Union, No. 1221, it was stated. The paving council is composed of the Engineers' Union, Local 77; the Truck Drivers' Union, Local 639, and the Road, Highway and Heavy Construction Laborers' Union, Local 456.

Employers in the industry have "almost unanimously signified their willingness to wholeheartedly approve of this amalgamation," Arnheim declared. It will have the effect of "bettering the war effort" of both workers and employers by the complete elimination of intra-union disputes.

The resolution adopted by the two groups called for dissolution of the local union, with members joining as a body with the AFL Paving Council. The War Labor Board will be requested at once to withdraw the agreement between the union and the seven contracting firms which have signed with it.

Representing the AFL Committee was Arnheim, as financial secretary of Local 456; J. C. Turner, business representative for Local 77, and A. W. Stream, president of Local 639.

The CIO Local 1221 committee was represented by Joseph Stevens, president; Louis Williams, secretary; Lloyd Davis, June Alston, William Petty and Dock Potts.

Dr. Ruhland Cites School Health Rules

A final appeal to have all children who will enter public schools this year physically examined for necessary medical treatment was issued yesterday by Dr. George C. Ruhland, District heal officer.

It was said that the Health Department's Bureau of Dental Services found 251,201 dental cavities among 86,737 school children last year, and almost 75 per cent needed dental attention.

Dr. Ruhland sought to impress the importance of having school children examined by both the family physician and dentist before the opening of school next Monday.

It was pointed out that parents of school children with bad hearing, impaired vision or other handicaps are invited to apply to the Health Department's Bureau of School Medical Inspection for a special medical examination. The department will examine the child, and if the findings so indicate, will recommend placement in special classes for the handicapped conducted by the Board of Education.

Health essentials for children entering school were summarized as follows: A health checkup by the family physician, a dental examination, smallpox vaccination (compulsory for new pupils), diphtheria immunization (recommended). Birth certificates also are compulsory for new pupils. Home instruction in cleanliness and sound health habits is urged.

Mrs. Roosevelt On Her Way Home

Clatterbucks Confession to Five Killings Is Admitted as Evidence in Russell Case

Special Dispatch to The Post

Leesburg, Va., Sept. 15.—Thomas William Clatterbuck's purported confession to the slaying of five persons was admitted as evidence this afternoon in his trial for the killing of Walter Russell, one of the five, and thus for the first time the full story in his own words was read to the jury and became common knowledge.

As his mother, Mrs. J. H. Clatterbuck, wept uncontrollably and other members of his family showed the strain, Clatterbuck's words in the confession, as read to the jury by Assistant Prosecutor W. W. Butzner of Fredericksburg, fell on the hushed courtroom just three hours after Maj. Robert A. McIntyre of defense counsel had opened his fight to bar the confession on the grounds it was not valid and that "all details as to the manner by which it was obtained was subject to proof."

Matter for Jury

Commonwealth's Attorney C. F. Harrison fought just as hard to have the document introduced. Judge J. R. H. Alexander, presiding in this Circuit Court trial, admitted the confession and ruled the "weight of the confession must be determined by the jury."

Clatterbuck's words, as read by Butzner, had to do with the slaying on June 1 of Farmer A. Morris Love, his wife and son, and their tenant farmer, Russell and his wife, although the trial here concerns itself with the killing of Russell only. According to the confession, this is what happened on that fatal northern Virginia day after Clatterbuck had arrived at the Love home to discuss with Love an alleged forged note issued by Clatterbuck and held by Love and which Love had threatened to expose.

The purported confession:

"He (Love) told me he was going to prosecute and wouldn't give me more time. I was scared that I was going to prison due to the forgery on one of the notes and I struck him (Love) twice over the head with a croquet mallet which I took out of a box back of us." The two men were at that time sitting on Love's front porch.

He then threw the mallet out in the yard and was later found by a police officer. After hitting Love, the confession continued, James Love, the son, came to the door to see what was going on. Clatterbuck shot the son. He turned from the son and saw Mrs. Love in the room. She was screaming and "I held the gun close to her and shot." After that Clatterbuck walked to the porch to see if the elderly Love was dead and he covered the body with a "piece of ticking."

Knew He'd Been Seen

"I knew Walter Russell had seen me when I arrived so I walked down the lane to the barn hiding my rifle. When I was close to him I fired and then hit him twice over the head. I then went to the tenant house where I killed the woman. (Mrs. Russell, wife of the tenant farmer, Russell.) I placed the rifle near the middle of the body and shot and when she fell I shot her in the temple. I then took the rifle and placed it by the side of Russell and the billfold in his pocket. (This was the billfold in which the elderly Love had kept the alleged forged notes.)

"I had removed the notes which were later burned in the courthouse parking lot alley."

20 Witnesses Testify

Previous to the reading of the asserted confession, about 20 witnesses had testified how Clatterbuck had called Love on the preceding day of the crime to talk with him about the note which was due and of how he told Mrs. Love, who answered the telephone, that he would be at the Love home the next morning. The witnesses were police officers, bank officials, neighbors of the slain families. All testified that Clatterbuck's actions were apparently normal and that he had not seemed nervous or upset.

This was contrarywise to the announced intention of Major McIntyre's to hav eexperts called to the stand when the defense presents its testimony to show "Clatterbuck had been examined last February and declared a victim of dementia praecox."

Miss Sarah Love, who may have escaped with her life only because she was not at home on the fatal day, attended the trial today. She remained calm and twice took the stand to testify to the two notes and told of the forgeries on one of them, which was for $2000.

Clear Track Ahead

● From the cab of his locomotive, the engineer looks ahead at the long stretch of steel rail illuminated by the headlight's brilliant beam.

Perhaps it hasn't occurred to you, but that beam symbolizes, in a sense, the light of Freedom pointing the way to a better future . . . a "clear track ahead."

That's what you want—a better world in which to live. Not so much for yourself but for all those young Americans who must face the future whatever it may be. And the fulfillment of that desire depends first on our victory.

One Union Pacific engineer cannot win this war but he—his brother engineers—and many thousands of other railroad employes, men and women, are bringing victory nearer by exerting every effort to make certain that troops and war materials are efficiently and safely transported.

Major League Tour of Pacific Given Army O. K.

Niggeling Gives 3 Hits as Nats Win, 5 to 0

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

Now that the Army has given baseball the green light to go ahead with its tour of the Pacific theater with teams of big leaguers entertaining American troops behind the lines, it behooves baseball to make the most of it.

POVICH

There was an alarming note yesterday following announcement that the tour would be made, when Judge Landis said he assumed the personnel of the two big league teams would be chosen by vote of the managers of each league. Heaven forbid. That would be getting off to a horrible start, an unpardonable muff of the whole idea of entertaining the troops.

The thing to be avoided, we'd say, would be any selection of the teams by the managers of the leagues. That ought to be a job for somebody with more appreciation of which ball players the servicemen would like to see in action. For the past several years we've had a bitter diet of All-Star teams selected by the managers with the people's choices left off the squads.

A baseball manager's idea of an all-star player too often doesn't jell with the peepul's favorites, and soldiers are still people we are assuming. The work-a-day ball player may be appreciated by a manager, but the public wants to see its own particular heroes in action, and to heck with the batting or pitching averages.

On his record, for example, Buck Newsom would not qualify as a member of any all-star team and would scarcely get a manager's vote, but our troops in Australia would certainly get more of a belt out of seeing the big galoot, Newsom, throw his blimp ball and stage his show for them, than watching one of the colorless 18 or 20 game winners in action with their methodical precision.

They'd want to see, also, a guy like George Case, turn it on the baselines, but if Landis is assuming correctly, Case isn't any sure-shot to be invited on the trip. Too many outfielders are outhitting him. But given their choice, the troops would vote emphatically for Case. The ordinary big league manager with a vote would be slow to grasp that situation, because he thinks chiefly in terms of all-around talent in a ball player.

The teams ought to be picked on a different basis than Landis predicts. A chap like Larry MacPhail, with an appreciation of showmanship and an insight into what the troops in the field would like best, ought to be given carte blanche to choose the teams with an eye both to skill and entertainment. After all, that latter seems to be the whole excuse for the tour.

It was a bit disquieting, too, when Landis revealed that the managers of the two teams probably would be picked after a consultation with the club owners. There's a fair chance they'll muff that one, too. In fact, there is only one manager in the American League who would seem to recommend himself for the job. He's Joe Cronin of the Red Sox, a firebrand type and the only one in the league out of whom the troops would get any kind of a thrill.

Joe McCarthy is rated a better manager than Cronin, but who ever got excited about McCarthy directing a ball game. As far as the public is concerned, he's a myth. They rarely see him emerge from the dug-out. But Cronin, ah, he'd be something for our troops to see, with his fighting face and red-necked behavior. Any other choice, with the possible exception of Jimmy Dykes, would be a bad one.

In fact, it might be well for the club owners to go beyond the pale of the managerial line-up in the American League and pick a man whose very presence with a club would produce a thrill. We mean Babe Ruth. That's the way the soldiers probably would want it, Ruth managing one of the clubs. The Babe would take the job instantly, and with him as a part of it, the tour would be lifted into a special sort of significance for the troops.

And if Landis and the club owners aren't careful, they'll muff the selection of the umpires, too. They will surely muff it if they select anybody except Bill McGowan and Bill Summers from the American League. It's axiomatic that no fan ever paid his money in at the gate to see an umpire perform, but McGowan and Summers come closest to being any sort of an attraction in umpire's garb. McGowan's positive antics on the field, and Summers' iron-lunged decisions meet the popular conception of a good umpire better than any of the others.

Baseball has a great opportunity to solidify itself as the national game with this tour overseas, and we were thinking that the brass hats of the game ought to be careful what sort of a show they put on for the soldiers. Anything less than the best would defeat the whole idea. We'd say the main thing was to let the troops see the players they want to see, not athletes whom the managers happen to like.

Army Okays Baseball's War Tour

All Clubs May Be Represented; Trip Starts Directly After World Series

Big league baseball is going to the wars. Two all-star teams to be picked from the National and American Leagues will play a series for the troops in the Pacific theater.

The announcement was made yesterday at the office of Maj. Gen. A. D. Surles, the Army's Public Relations director, in the presence of Baseball Commissioner Kenesaw M. Landis.

Landis said the trip was not his idea, but a voluntary proposal by the baseball players as a patriotic gesture.

"I'm not hostile to it," he laughed, "but it's not my baby."

"The teams will be sent to undisclosed destinations in the Pacific theater of operations following the close of the World Series," the War Department announcement said.

Commissioner Landis said the all-stars will donate their time, and the transportation will be handled by the Army.

The two managers probably will be selected first by the presidents of the leagues in consultation with the club owners, Landis said.

Landis said he assumed the usual system for selecting all-star teams—by vote of the managers of the eight clubs in each league—would be followed, the Associated Press reported.

There probably will be 18 men on each team, and it is likely that all clubs in both leagues will be represented, although the strength of the two teams will not be sacrificed merely to give each club representation, Landis said.

Two umpires will accompany the all-stars, one named by the American League and the other by the National League.

Landis pointed out that the teams could not begin their trip until after the World Series which starts October 5. He said the all-stars probably would not be selected until some time after the first of October.

It's Official—Major Leaguers Approved for War Tour

Tigers Down Chisox, 8-2; Rookie Stars

By International News Service

Chicago, Sept. 15.—Catcher Paul Richards' double in the third which scored two runs and Shortstop Luke Appling's heave into right field in an attempt to nip Richards at second gave the Detroit Tigers a big five-run frame and an 8-to-2 win tonight over the Chicago White Sox.

Rufus Gentry, Tiger importation from Buffalo of the International League, pitched shutout ball after the second inning and gave the weak-hitting Hose only six hits in fashioning his first major league victory.

Yanks Beat Athletics, 7-3, On 3 Homers

By the Associated Press

New York, Sept. 15.—Charley Keller took 20 minutes of special batting practice before the New York Yankees met the Philadelphia Athletics today and when he came to the plate in the first inning he poled out his twenty-seventh home run with two mates aboard.

This proved to be the keynote of the ball game, which the Yankees won, 7 to 3, because subsequently But Metheny hit his eighth roundtripper and second in two days, Joe Gordon collected his fourteenth of the year, and rookie George Staller punched one for the A's with two on.

The blow in the eighth inning by Staller, who came to the Athletics yesterday from Baltimore of the International League, spoiled a shutout for Hank Borowy. He gave only six hits and acquired his

Halas Denies Redskins Use of Bear Players

President of Club Wires Definite 'No' On Sunday Play Here for Artoe, Plasman

Lieut. Comdr. George Halas, president of the Chicago Bears and coach until he received his naval commission last year, yesterday wired a very definite "no" to the requests of former Bears, Ensign Lee Artoe and Lieut. Dick Plasman, to play Sunday football with the Redskins.

How Artoe and Plasman expected to get Navy permission to play or just why Halas was expected to allow two of his best players to play with the Bears' greatest rivals just because they were stationed in this area was not explained.

Artoe, all-league tackle last year, played the full season with the Bears and scored the only touchdown in the playoff game against the Redskins when he picked up a fumble and ran 45 yards. He has been in the press box in Baltimore watching the 'Skins the last two Sundays.

Plasman was stationed at the Naval Air Station in Anacostia last year. He was a marked man in the Bears' line-up with the championship teams of 1940 and 1941 as he played his end position without headgear.

The Redskins had nobody to offer the Bears for the two players whose loss would not have weakened Dutch Bergman's present squad. If Artoe and Plasman had obtained permission to play they

Yanks Are Heavy Favorites to Beat Cards in Series

By the Associated Press

St. Louis, Sept. 15.—Betting Commissioner James J. Carroll today made the New York Yankees topheavy favorites in the 1943 World Series, quoting 13-20 odds on the American League club and 13-10 on the St. Louis Cardinals.

He listed the same odds on the opening game, with Spud Chandler pitching against Mort Cooper.

The odds mean the bettor must put up $20 to collect $13 if New York wins, while he would collect $13 for $10 if his money was on the Cardinals.

Amazing, True; Browns Win 7th Straight

By the Associated Press

St. Louis, Sept. 15.—Those amazing St. Louis Browns came up with a couple of exceptional records—for the Browns—today.

For one thing, in defeating Cleveland, 4 to 2, for their seventh straight triumph, the club entered its longest winning streak of the season. For another, the game marked the seventh successive contest in which a Brownie hurler went the distance. Veteran Al Hollingsworth marked up his sixth win.

Al Zarilla put the game on ice with his seventh-inning home run with two men on base.

Red Sox Hitless After Four Innings; Nats Boost Lead Over Beaten Tribe

By Shirley Povich

Post Staff Writer

Johnny Niggeling, who was a hospital case last week with a stomach disorder, was in extreme good health last night at Griffith Stadium and pitched the Nats to their sixth straight victory—a three-hit, shut-out job against the Red Sox, 5 to 0.

Niggeling unloaded a beaut, permitting the Red Sox nothing more than a single, and after the fourth inning he gave up no hits whatsoever.

Jake Early was no drawback to the Nats, incidentally. With two men on base in the third inning, Tex Hughson threw Early a change of pace that was very slow getting up to the plate. However, it was very fast getting out of the park, with Early banging it over the right field wall for a three-run homer.

That pleased the 8500 customers very much.

Tribe 2½ Back

Unbeaten in their last 12 games at Griffith Stadium, the Nats solidified their grip on second place now showing a 2½-game margin over the Cleveland Indians who were considerate enough to drop their third straight to the Browns yesterday.

Early's blow was the big hit of the Nats' 12-hit attack against Hughson and Mike Ryba, but the Nats were already leading at the time 2 to 0.

George Case and Stan Spence wrenched a run out of Hughson right off the bat in the first inning. Case beat out a hit off Tabor's glove and as becomes the league's leading base stealer, he stole second pronto. Whereupon Spence, who delights in belaboring the club that traded him to Washington, scored him with a single to center.

Spence started the third-inning trouble for Hughson, too. He swung with great vigor and crashed a triple high off the right field wall, not far from homerun territory. Bob Johnson got him home with a

Phillies Double 1942 Attendance; Set New Mark

By the Associated Press

Philadelphia, Sept. 15.—The Philadelphia Phillies set an all-time Phillies attendance record of 466,876 fans this season at Shibe Park, the club announced today. This was approximately double the 1942 attendance.

Minus high-salaried stars and helped financially by the elimination of a spring training trip, the Phillies are expected to show a sizeable profit for the new owners, William D. Cox and associates, who purchased the club last winter from the National League after Gerald Nugent stepped out of the picture.

Dallas Shirley Named Chief Of High School Sports Here

Local Athletic Official Succeeds Hardy Pearce As Head of Health and Physical Education

J. Dallas Shirley, well known in District sports and physical education circles for the last 12 years, has been appointed acting head of the Department of Health and Physical education, divisions one through nine, the Board of Education announced yesterday.

He will fill the post vacatde by Hardy L. Peace, who recently left for military service.

Shirley received a B. S. degree in physical education from George Washington University in 1936 and since then has taken several courses there in administration and supervision, as well as taking graduate work in health and physical education. He also completed a summer school course at the Navy Preflight Coaching School at Chapel Hill, N. C., in 1942.

Informed of his appointment yesterday, Shirley said he was happy to hear it, and expected a great year in District athletics.

"I have a couple of large shoes to fill, though," he asserted.

Shirley's 12 years of health and physical education work included six years on the staff of the local

'Whizzer' White Carries Ball Against Japs

By the Associated Press

At a Motor Torpedo Boat Base in the New Georgia Islands, Sept. 5 (Delayed).—A turn to the right, and take three steps, turn left and walk 15 more steps, and there at a desk in a sand-bagged dugout in the yellow glow of electric lights is one of the most extraordinary young men to gain fame playing football.

WHITE

He is Navy Lieut. Byron Raymond White, 26, of Wellington, Colo., commonly known as "Whizzer" White, a nickname he earnestly dislikes.

A former All-America football ace for the University of Colorado, former Oxford University Rhodes scholar, and former professional football player, he left the Yale University Law School to enter the Navy Reserve as an ensign in May, 1942, and became a lieutenant, junior grade, a year later.

His job now is with the PT boats staff operating against the Japanese in the northern Solomons, and the New Georgias. He was lent by the staff of the commander of the South Pacific forces to do the job, and has been 10 weeks at forward bases.

Tall fair-haired and still evidently very fit physically, White smiles in recalling incidents of the football field, but his interest is winning the war and going back to Yale for his final year of law study.

"Football was just a means to an end—education—so far as I was concerned," he said. "I went from college into pro football to make money to pay for schooling."

At the University of Colorado, from which he was graduated in 1938, he was noted as a scholar as well as one of the best halfbacks ever developed in the Rocky Mountain Conference. His scholastic standing won him a Rhodes Scholarship. He attended Oxford one year and came back for two years at Yale Law School.

In between times, he played pro football for Pittsburgh one season, and for the Detroit Lions two years.

Bellwether, Another Long Shot, Is Third; Favored Prof. Lee Fifth in Field of 11

By the Associated Press

Aqueduct Race Track, New York, Sept. 15.—In a photo finish that brought the huge crowd to its feet, A. C. Ernst's Alorter and Mrs. Helene Miller's Ogham, both lightly backed, hit the wire as named in the Cowdin Stakes, worth $15,250 to the victor, here this afternoon. Making it a long shot monopoly, Comdr. Harry Guggenheim's Bellwether was third, three-quarters of a length behind.

Henry Lustig's Professor Lee, favorite at 95 cents on the dollar, finished fifth in the field of 11 crack juveniles, while John Marsch's Washington Park Futurity hero, Occupy, was a dull-running seventh.

Ogham Returns $40.10

Alorter paid $35.90 for $2 and ran 6½ furlongs of a sloppy track in 1:18 2-5 under Johnny Deering. Ogham returned $40.10 for place and Bellwether $11 for show.

The attendance was announced as 19,022. When the final check is available, the figure doubtlessly will be boosted enough to top the best previous week-day throng of the meeting—the 19,037 of last Monday.

Mrs. Ames, Professor Lee's stable mate, and Free Lance, were scratched.

Alorter, bred by his owner, was a triple stake winner around Chicago. He carried 115 pounds today, while Occupy was top weighted under 126. Professor Lee, which had won his only two starts by wide margins, met topnotchers for the first time today and was found wanting. Ted Atkinson hustled him into an early one-length advantage, but Ogham, a star mudder, soon put the Lustig colt away with little effort, the Professor dropping back steadily after three furlongs.

Bellwether Chief Pursuer

Ogham assumed almost two lengths advantage after disposing of the choice. Bellwether became the chief pursuer and Fox Brownie, bothered Early, gamely rallied into third position around the bend.

Alorter, next to last leaving the gate, gained steadily and, charging around the leaders turning for home, got within a length of Ogham a furlong from the wire. It was nip and tuck to the end, with Bellwether holding on well to complete the surprises. Fox Brownie was fourth.

Professor Lee and Occupy were the only starters named for Belmont Park's rich futurity.

Tackling Navy Problems

Blubber Bout Won by Leone And Sharkey

Some 1600 pounds of unrationed beef was rampant at Turner's Arena last night where Babe Sharkey and Michele Leone won the Blubber Battle from the two-man wrestling team of Blimp Levy and Ed White, who was substituting for Wladislaw Talun. The winners captured the first two falls in nine and seven minutes, respectively, and in both instances the hapless Levy was the victim.

In taking the first fall, Leone floored White and then he and pal Sharkey dumped Levy on the prone fellow and pinned him for the count.

The 625-pound Levy became the stooge once more when Leone booted him in one of his tummies and then jumped him, along with Sharkey, for another pinning. Just before the end, all the performers excepting the Blimp were scuffling outside the ropes amongst the customers.

Nanjo Singh won the cofeature from Abe Stein, defeating that fellow with a terrific cobra clutch in 19 minutes. Until the finish, Stein was being a very heinous individual and mistreated the Hindu outrageously—slugging, strangling etc.

Ed White, in his initial appearance of the evening, beat Chief Bamba Tabu with a body press in 15. The Chief was the hero for the first time since he has been haunting Turner's—this simply because White was meaner—and he couldn't stand prosperity. Every time the crowd yelled, Tabu assumed he was being maligned and proceeded to snarl at the patrons who were merely pleading for him to stab White. He was much confuddled about the whole business and thus it was that he was set upon by White who floored him with a knee and then pinned him.

Dr. John Bonica and Maurice La Chappell drew in a clean, scientific opener that had the fans roaring an ovation at the finish.

Bivins Defeats Melio Bettina

Cleveland, Ohio, Sept. 15 (AP).—Jimmy Bivins stretched his string of ring victories to 13 tonight and handed Corpl. Melio Bettina his first defeat as a heavyweight by punching his way to a 10-round decision before about 18,000 in Cleveland's lakefront stadium. Bettina weighed 185½ and had a 3-pound edge.

Red Cross Golf Deadline Set For Monday

Dr. W. C. Barr, secretary of the District Golf Association, will adhere strictly to the entry deadline of 6 p. m. next Monday for the Handicap Mixed Scotch Foursome tournament to be played for Red Cross benefit next Wednesday, September 22, at Chevy Chase Club.

The association decided to accept club handicaps from the women golfers instead of District Women's Golf Association officials' handicaps, as the men will be allowed to use club allowances.

The entry fee for the annual tournament has been raised to $5 per couple but all fees will be donated to the Red Cross. Suitable prizes will be awarded.

The event may be the only activity of the year sponsored by the District Golf Association unless the links officials schedule a District championship on short notice.

Members of member clubs of the DCGA are eligible for next Wednesday's alternate shot tournament. Each team will be allowed one half of the combined handicap.

Jockey James' Ride on Talent Being Probed

By the Associated Press

Collinsville, Ill., Sept. 15.—Pvt. Basil James nationally known jockey who has been riding at Fairmount Park while on a furlough from Fort Robinson, Nebr., canceled his engagements today at the request of Steward Pat C. Galliger of the Illinois Racing Commission.

Galliger said he was investigating James' ride on a horse named Talent, favorite in the fifth race, which finished out of the money yesterday. When other jockeys learned of the dismounting, they threatened to go on a sympathy strike but were dissuaded by James.

An official of the track, who asked that his name not be used, said Galliger's action was "autocratic and insulting."

"James is one of the outstanding riders of the country and has never had a black mark against him during seven years as a jockey," the official said.

Mrs. Bullock Wins Kenwood Golf Event

Mrs. J. H. Bullock was low net winner in Class A in the weekly Ladies Day tournament of the Kenwood Women's Golf committee yesterday with a gross of 95, minus 15 handicap strokes for a net 80. Mrs. J. T. Powell was in her usual role of low putts winner with 32 strokes.

Mrs. G. E. Peterson's 106-28, 78, won low net in Class B, with low putts to Mrs. W. E. Foley, 34.

Guest prize went to Mrs. W. E. Hall, Columbia, with 90-12, 78, while Mrs. M. J. Terlinski, Columbia, won low putts with 39.

The women's golf card at Kenwood includes the George Dittenbaugh Trophy play September 24, a special Ladies Day October 8 and the annual field day, October 29. The committee may pass up the fall club championship.

Kavakos Beaten, 1-0, in 10 Innings

Two errors in the tenth cost Cannonball Jack Smith and his Kavakos Grill teammates the ball game last night at Washington Softball Stadium in the District of Columbia Invitational Tournament as Mount Rainier eked out a 1-to-0 triumph.

Smith otherwise allowed the Marylanders two safeties, while Kavakos combed Tom Dobyns for four but were unable to connect safely with runners in scoring position. Smith departed immediately after the game for Detroit, where he will join Garvin's Grill in the national championship tourney.

Scoring Clarity Demanded of Ring Board by Dorazio's Pilot

Says Fighter Was Robbed Here Before

Wilson Requests Guard Against Unusual Verdict In Baksi Battle

A definite understanding of Washington's point-scoring system, which he claims cost his fighter a victory over Joe Baksi here last winter, yesterday was demanded of the District Boxing Commission by Jimmy Wilson, trainer and representative of Gus Dorazio, Philadelphia heavyweight, who meets big Al Hart, Washington War College Negro soldier, at Griffith Stadium Monday night.

Wilson, who drew a suspension for kicking up too much of a fuss when Baksi was announced the winner over Gus here, wants the intricacies of the D. C. rules fully explained to him to bar against a possible recurrence of his former sad experience. The Boxing Commission secretary, Richard J. O'Brien, yesterday said he would try to arrange the meeting for tomorrow.

Lost on Points

In the Dorazio-Baksi scrap, ringside observers, newspapermen and the three officials, Referee Charley Reynolds and two judges, were almost unanimous in giving Dorazio six of the ten rounds. But under the D. C. point scoring system, Baksi compiled more points in winning his fewer number of rounds than Dorazio did in winning his half-dozen, the decision thereby going to Baksi.

It was as a result of all the rumpus that Frankie "Blinkie" Palermo, manager of Dorazio, vowed he would never permit one of his fighters to box here but weakened and relented when Ahearn made him such an offer he could not well refuse. Later, in Philadelphia, Dorazio hammered Baksi from pillar to post to win a unanimous decision, a fight which left Baksi so battered he has not fought since.

Winner Gets Bivins

Ahearn further guaranteed both Hart and Dorazio the winner would be given a shot at Jimmy Bivins, Cleveland heavyweight who is recognized as the "duration champion," here on October 12.

Meanwhile, as his representative was preparing for his bout with the commission, Dorazio was going through with his card workouts at Goldie Ahearn's gym, 419 9th st. nw., yesterday, boxing several rounds and working 10 in all. Hart, forsaking the 12th st. YMCA to work at Ahearn's emporium, works daily, starting at 7 p. m. after finishing soldier duties at the Army War College. Both will workout again today, same times.

'Skins Can't Use Artoe, Plasman

could not have practiced in the regular morning session nor played in out-of-town games.

Elmer Layden, pro football commissioner, would have had something to say, in all probability, as permission for Artoe and Plasman to play here would have started a vicious circle whereby any former pro leaguer in the services stationed in a town with a ball club would have sought a temporary release for Sunday games.

When Roman Bentz, the big tackle from Tulane, left the Redskins yesterday he was the fifteenth player to leave Dutch Bergman's squad after taking up time in practice sessions and ball games without being of any service in league games.

After Frank Ribar, the lineman from Duke and the Norfolk Shamrocks joins the team today, Bergman hopes to settle down to instructing a fairly stable outfit. The squad will not be cut and the only pending change may be the trade in the offing in which the Redskins are seeking a back and end and and must give up a player for each one they obtain.

The Redskins transported five players from the San Diego training camp to Chicago merely for the purpose of strengthening the squad in the All-Star game. Four were released on the West Coast, one quit, one was traded, three have received service calls while with the team and another was sent home to treat an injury.

In addition to Bentz, Bob McChesney, Roy Zimmerman, Eldon Werkheiser, Ollie Oja, Ted Laux, Ted Key, Sal Mena, Walter Ziemba, Steve Bargarus, Don Nolander, Walter Halapeck, Warren Plunkett, Dave Bernard and Jack Roberts have worn Redskin uniforms at one time since late in July.

Heart-to-Heart Talk on Hart

Jimmy Wilson, Gus Dorazio's trainer, talks it over with his charge as Dorazio prepares to go through with his daily workout at Ahern's gym, 419 9th st. nw., for his important 10-rounder with big Al Hart at Griffith Stadium, Monday night. The winner has been promised a shot on October 12 with Jimmy Bivins, Joe Louis' choice for "duration champ."

Phils and Giants Sleep Fast And Divide Double-Header

How Can They Run Around All Night And Play in Morning? 903 Fans Nosey

By the Associated Press

Philadelphia, Sept. 15.—The New York Giants and the Phillies, who did not finish last night's 10-inning 4-to-4 tie game until after 1 o'clock this morning, resumed play at 11 a. m. today and divided a double-header.

Only 903 paying customers turned out to see the lunch-time program in which the Phillies triumphed in the opener 1-to-0 on Lefty Jack Kraus' four-hit hurling and lost the second game 6-to-3 with Big Bill Lee giving up all the Giants' runs in the first four innings.

The lone marker in the first contest was scored in the fifth on a single by Merrill May and a triple by Ray Hamrick. Ace Adams relieved Van Mungo at the beginning of the eighth and remained on the scene just long enough to walk two batters, but it counted as his 65th appearance of the season and put him within one game of tying the Major League record set by Ed Walsh in 1908.

Nats Defeat Bosox Behind Niggeling, 3-0

single to center, but the Nats were still hungry for runs.

Mickey Vernon beat out a hit over second base, and with two out, Hughson had two strikes on Early when he tried to bait him with the aforementioned slow-ball and the aforementioned results.

That was all the scoring for the night. Hughson retired after that rough third inning and Mike Ryba held the Nats runless to the finish, but Niggeling was out there doing a masterful job on the Red Sox.

The frail veteran used his knuckler only sparingly when he discovered he lacked control of it—he walked four men in the early innings—and was throwing up a curve and tolerable fast ball. The closest the Red Sox came to scoring was in the third when an error and a single put men on first and third with one out but when L. Newsome tried to score on Garrison's grounder to Bob Johnson, the reformed outfielder threw him out by a half block.

It was only Niggeling's second victory in his four starts for the Nats, but his record is impressive nevertheless . . . He has allowed only four runs in all four games, going the route in each . . . It was the first game in which the Nats have given him more than one run to work with . . . Gerry Priddy twice kept hits away from the Red Sox with some fancy one-handed pick-ups far to his left on ground balls . . . Ford Garrison was his victime on each occasion . . . The victory was the Nats' twelfth over the Red Sox in their 22-game series this season.

Brothers of Stars Joy to Texas High Coach

By the Associated Press

Austin, Tex., Sept. 15.—Standard Lambert, coach of the Texas schoolboy football champions, says having brothers of former athletes on your team is a great help.

He ought to know. There are 11 youngsters whose older brothers starred in athletics—mostly in football—at Austin High.

Lambert explained that when he had boys like that he didn't have to "educate" their families. Mothers learn how to prepare food for athletes and enforce training rules after having one boy on the squad.

Names like Raven, Munson and Allen appear this year. Travis Raven did such things as running 103 yards for a touchdown and scoring 39 points in one game for Austin High. Terrell Allen was All-State center last year. Charley Munson was a mighty runner and punter for the Maroons of 1941.

Well, Frank Raven, Jimmy Munson and H. K. Allen are on the Austin squad this season. And so on.

Then, there's one brother combination still intact. Jack Wiswell is back to play end. His little brother, Bobby, is an end on the "suicide squad"—a gang of fellows just starting out in football.

H. K. Allen is quarterbacking this year's team. He was a reserve last season when brother Terrell had some words with a Dallas lineman. Up charged H. K.

When Lambert asked the younger Allen why he mixed in the disagreement he replied: "If anybody was going to be put out of the game it would be better for it to be me because Terrell is too important to us."

Third Stringer So Far

Frankie Sinkwich Dons Jersey Of Detroit Lions—Likes It

First Day of Action Convinces Coach Gus Dorais He Has 'Extra Something'

By the Associated Press

Detroit, Sept. 15.—Fireball Frankie Sinkwich, pulling on a football jersey for the first time since the Rose Bowl game, started out in pro ball today as a third-stringer, but it's a cinch he'll rank much higher for his National League debut Sunday.

The blond Georgia All-America halfback, who last night signed a one-year contract with the downtrodden Detroit Lions, slipped right into action this morning and quickly convinced Coach Gus Dorais that he has that extra something he is supposed to possess.

FRANKIE SINKWICH

"He seems to be in good shape and he undoubtedly will do this club much good," declared Dorais. "I don't think I'll start him against the Chicago Cardinals here Sunday, but it's a cinch he'll see action."

Looks Fast, Shifty

Foxy Old Dorais, one-time buddy of the late Knute Rockne, assigned 23-year-old Frankie to the tailback post in a backfield with Rookies Bob Keene and Mike Corgan and Holdover Tommy Colella. In signal drills Frankie looked fast and shifty. Later in passing practice he hit the target repeatedly.

Sinkwich said he liked the way the pro boys accepted him.

"Say, they all act like they really want me here," said Frankie after a quick shower as he headed for the dining room.

Alex Wojciechowicz, the old Fordham center and dean of the Detroit players, declared that was precisely how the veterans felt about him.

"He's a nice boy," said Wojie, "and he looks like he's in pretty good shape. He says he's down to 188 after dropping 30 pounds in Marine boot training, and he looks it."

They Got a Laugh

Sinkwich's new teammates got a big laugh at Frankie's expense this morning.

Rolling out of bed in the bunkhouse of a golf club in suburban Grosse Ile, Sinkwich immediately started smoothing back the covers and making the bed.

"Never mind that, Frankie," yelled one veteran. "You aren't in the Marines any more."

Speed, More Speed, Asked Of Middies

By the Associated Press

Annapolis, Sept. 15.—The Tar varsity was using a single wingback formation in scrimmages against the B squad's modifications of the T formation today in preparation for at least two gridiron opponents, possibly a third, using the latter form.

Navy opponents using the T are Notre Dame and Army, and perhaps North Carolina Preflight, the latter scheduled to open the Middies' season here on September 25.

Running against the B squad's T were Navy's backfielders Ben Martin, Tom Dwyer, Joe Sullivan and Hal Hamberg, while in the line positions were Al Channell (captain) and Roe Johnston, ends; Ben Chase and George Brown, guards; Ed Elliott and John Gilooly, tackles, and Jack Martin, center.

Complaining of a comparatively light squad, stacked up against those of previous years, Coach John E. (Billick) Whelchel is after the Middies for speed, speed and more speed.

The assistant coaches, too, are increasing their demands for speed plus accuracy, whether in the backfield or in the line.

"What good is a fast backfield if the linesmen are not doing their specific jobs quickly and well," reason the coaches, "and what good is a big hole in the line if the backs don't take advantage of it?"

To eliminate as far as possible these two possibilities, "Billick" and his staff are pushing the boys to see that nothing is done halfway or in a slipshod manner.

Maybe Navy doesn't have a powerhouse, using the weight factor, but the Tar mentor plans to make up for that deficiency by developing a smooth hard-driving and fast-working aggregation.

"We'll know better what we have after we meet N. C. Preflight, and we can't make any predictions now because we don't what's ahead," say the coaches.

Race Hearing Witness Tells Of U. S. Board Discrimination

By the Associated Press

A War Labor Board sociologist yesterday testified that another Federal agency, the National Mediation Board (railways) had aided and abetted discrimination against Negro workers on Southern railways.

Dr. Herbert R. Northrup, WLB adviser on Negro labor problems, appeared as the first witness in the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices, hearing charges of discrimination against 22 railroads and 14 railway labor unions.

Dr. Northrup said Dr. William M. Leiserson, chairman of the Mediation Board, and the late James W. Carmalt, former member, had aided and advised white labor unions on methods to deny Negro workers fair representation in collective bargaining.

Letters Go Into Record

Letters from Leiserson and Carmalt to railway labor union officials were read into the record by Northrup.

Leiserson, he said, divulged strategic plans of the Negro helpers of the Jacksonville Terminal Co. to white union officials in advising them to withdraw their own case from Mediation Board jurisdiction lest the Negro workers win a union election.

Carmalt advised a white rail union involved in a jurisdictional election that increased representation for Negro workers constituted an "unhealthy condition," Northrup reported.

"It is to be doubted that such apparent favoritism constitutes a sound public policy," Northrup told FEPC. "Te National Mediation Board is not above criticism for its actions."

Railroads' Side Presented

Sidney Alderman, counsel for the Southern Railway, presented the railroads' joint opening statement, asserting that the problem before the FEPC was one which could "only be solved by orderly evolution." He opposed any "Utopian" solution which he said would threaten both the Negroes' own welfare, and the war effort.

Msgr. Francis J. Haas is chairman of the FEPC, which is charged by President Roosevelt with the duty of eliminating discrimination because of creed, color, religion, or racial origin in any war industry.

The hearing is the first full-dress inquiry into such charges involving a major industry.

OPA Cases

50 Grocers Face Threat Of Trial

Fifty local grocers reported to have violated price ceiling and posting regulations were warned within the last seven days to "get in line" or face court action, it was learned yesterday.

Carl W. Berueffy, chief enforcement attorney for the District OPA said, "Although we would rather have them comply, we will take grocers into court if they do not."

He said that most of the grocers involved failed to post meat prices. Flagrant violators, he said, will be named in injunction proceedings and would face severe court penalties if violations continued in the face of an injunction. In "isolated cases' he said, suits may be instituted to suspend licenses.

Meanwhile Morris Fuchs, grocer at 5004 1st st. nw., called the Office of Price Administration methods "amateurish" and denied charges that he has been guilty of numerous price ceiling and posting violations.

OPA seeks to have Fuchs' right to sell price controlled foods suspended for a year.

Fuchs denied that most of the charges had any basis in fact. He said that all prices were posted in his store except for those which were changing in price. He cited one OPA chart which listed as the maximum price for coffee the same price which OPA charges is a violation of the law in his case.

"Before the war, dissatisfied customers would complain to the merchant if there had been a mistake. Now they complain to the OPA and the merchant has to suffer for things he never did," Fuchs said.

Union Got Dues From Soldier Cannery Aides

By the Associated Press

Trenton, N. J., Sept. 15.—Soldiers who worked recently at one South Jersey cannery to relieve a labor shortage during the peak of the tomato season were compelled to pay union dues, Herbert W. Voorhees, president of the New Jersey Farm Bureau, said today.

Voorhees, in an address prepared for delivery at the New Jersey State Fair, said:

"I was shocked beyond words to learn that when a contingent of soldiers reported for work at a certain south Jersey cannery, the management was instructed to make the usual union dues deductions from the cannery pay envelope of each one."

Voorhees said he did not know whether union officials had insisted upon dues being collected from all the 1000 soldiers similarly employed in the State.

However, Leon Schachter, business manager of Meat and Cannery Workers' Union, Local 56, AFL, said at Camden that the union collected union dues from soldiers who worked at two canneries in south Jersey.

"The soldiers volunteered to pay the dues and everybody was satisfied," Schachter asserted.

"Several hundred" soldiers paid union dues of 25 cents a week extending over four or five weeks this summer, Schachter estimated. They paid at the temporary workers' rate, whereas tthe dues for permanent workers are $2 per month.

The union had a closed shop agreement with the two canneries where the soldiers paid dues the union manager said, and the collection was required under the agreement. A group of 75 soldiers worked at each plant during the height of the labor shortage.

Officers at Fort Dix told the union, Schachter asserted, that the soldiers were working on an entirely voluntary basis and "were subject to conditions existing in the plants."

The soldiers, he continued, were paid union wages ranging from 50 to 60 cents an hour, their Army pay continued, "and this gave them a little extra spending money, which they were glad to get."

Navy Officers Killed On D. C. Flight Found

Two naval officers reported missing on a routine flight from Norfolk to Anacostia, September 7, were found dead Tuesday in their plane which crashed in a wooded section near Urbana, Va., the Navy Department revealed yesterday.

Later Work Hours for Boys, Girls Favored

By the Associated Press

The Board of Education yesterday went on record as favoring an amendment to the District labor law to permit employment of boys and girls 16 years of age or over until 10 p. m. provided their combined working and school day does not exceed nine hours a day, or eight hours a day when school is not in session. At present girls may not work after 7 p. m.

The board also accepted its legislative committee's report on a proposal by the District Commissioners which advocated employment of boys as pin setters in bowling alleys until 11 p. m. or midnight. The board disapproved this as too taxing on boys also attending school.

It also recommended that girls under 18 should not be employed in the housekeeping department of any hotel, and disapproved a suggestion to discontinue issuing of work permits to persons 16 and 17 as a major blow at control of employment of minors. Under the present work permit system, the schools exercise some control over hours of work and type of work. It also disapproved the Commissioner's suggestion that child labor inspectors may demand proof of age of minors only under 16 rather than under 18, as they do now.

The board approved such change only for a period not to exceed six months after termination of war hostilities.

At the same time, the board approved continuance of the coordinated work-school program in the business division of the schools which allows seniors, 16 or over, to get credit for work on afternoon jobs supervised by school personnel.

Considering a report on buildings and grounds that 1225 repair requests were stil outstanding as of August 31, the board decided to request more specific indication of the character of major requests to the board by school principals to insure that these receive appropriate attention.

In legislative discussion before the formal board meeting, Albert W. Lee, in his maiden appearance before the board since appointment last July, said the District repair shop workers were still on a 40-hour week, while most District employes are on 48 or 44-hour weeks. He said he hoped something could be done to get needed repairs up to schedule.

Acting Supt. Robert L. Haycock announced the transfer to use of the public schools equipment and supplies formerly used by the NYA in its war training program at the old Dennison School and establishment of war production training center No. 2, divisions 10-13 there. All equipment for this training have been taken from Phelps and Armstrong to this center, it was said.

Appointments Approved

The Board of Education yesterday also approved appointment of Francis A. Gregory, principal of Armstrong High School, and Mrs. D. Inborden Miller, principal of M. M. Washington Vocational School.

Six principals were named to evening schools: Harry S. Whitesell, Abbot; Daniel B. Lloyd, Central; William E. Barkman, Hine; Clara E. Challice, McKinley, and Charles C. Knight, Roosevelt.

Gregory was graduated from the Case School of Applied Science and received his M. S. in electrical engineering from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. He is now a candidate for the doctor's degree at Western Reserve University. Before entering the District schools in 1932 he taught at the A. and T. College and Tuskegee Institute. He taught at Armstrong High before becoming principal of Phelps Vocational School.

Mrs. Miller received an A. B. degree from Fisk University and an M. A. in home economics from Columbia University.

She taught home economics in North Carolina public schools from 1919 to 1925 when she became an instructor in the Teachers College, Winston-Salem, N. C. She became head of the Department of Home Economics at West Virginia State College where she served from 1927 to 1933 when she became head of the public schools home economics department, Divisions 10-13.

J. Dallas Shirley, formerly teacher and coach in the District schools, was named acting head of the Department of Health and Physical Education, succeeding Hardy Pearce, now on military leave.

District 2d in Traffic Safety Among Cities of Over 500,000

Developments in the traffic situation of the District of Columbia, in which Washington ranks second for safety in cities of more than 500,000 population, last night were:

1—The District was ranked next to Milwaukee, Wis., in safety for cities of better than 500,000 populations.

2—Washington's auto traffic volume was revealed as only 2.3 per cent smaller in August as against same month last year in spite of gasoline rationing.

3—Three persons were injured yesterday in streetcar and pedestrian accidents.

Washington's death rate through July was 8.3 per 100,000 population or 3.1 per 10,000 registered vehicles. Milwaukee, the safest city, had a rate of 6.7 per 100,000 population and 2.5 per 10,000 registered vehicles.

There were 59 traffic fatalities up to yesterday in this year, as compared to 72 for the same period of 1942.

William A. Van Duzer, Washington traffic director, said "we are proud of our second place, but it is not good enough. We won't be satisfied until Washington outranks all other cities."

Counts, taken at 13 key locations, showed that the average 24-hour traffic flow last month was 29 per cent below that of August of 1941, which was prior to gasoline rationing.

The department said traffic in August was slightly greater than during July. The morning rush-hour volume increased about 3 per cent, with the evening rush hour up 2 per cent, and the 24-hour average about 4 per cent.

Two of those hurt yesterday suffered their injuries when one streetcar ran into the rear of another in the 1200 block of 7th st. nw. C. G. Smoot, 58, of 448 10th st. nw., received bruises about his face and Robert L. Cash, 51, of 1119 10th st. nw., suffered chest bruises. They were treated at Sibley Hospital and released.

They were riding in the rear car, operated, police said, by Wallace L. Thomas, 29, of 809 E st. nw. The first car was operated, police said, by Albert S. Carter, 56, of 2281 Nichols ave. se.

Mary Bigby, 26, of 510 M st. nw., was the pedestrian victim, according to police. She walked into the side of a Sterrett Operating Service van at 7th and P sts. nw.

A hit-and-run bicyclist was sought by police last night. He left the scene after striking Lillian M. Thomas, 37, of 2407 15th st. nw., as she stepped from a loading platform at 14th and I sts. nw. She was admitted to Emergency Hospital with a possible fractured hip.

Oil, Gasoline Stocks in East Continue Rise

Gasoline supplies increased 526,000 barrels to 71,928,000 during the week in reflecting higher production and slightly less demand, the American Petroleum Institute reported yesterday.

This compared with 71,402,000 barrels last week and 80,224,000 a year ago.

Light fuel oils (distillates) increased 728,000 barrels to 39,401,000 while heavy (residual) fuels fell 664,000 to 67,011,000. Production of the former was estimated at 4,162,000 barrels compared with 4,361,000 a week earlier and 4,215,000 last year while output of the latter was 8,350,000 against last week's 8,703,000 and 7,094,000 in 1942.

The index on Eastern seaboard civilian supplies of gasoline, light and heavy fuel oils stood at 41.9 per cent of normal against 40.3 last week and 60.1 a year ago.

Business Briefs Of D. C. Interest

A. C. C. Loadings Level Off

C. McD. Davis, president of the Atlantic Coast Line, said today passenger traffic on the road continue at record level but car loadings are showingg evidence of leveling off.

Davis said reasons for the freight situation were attributable to the fact that comparisons are now being made with a period last year when there were large gains, while construction of new war plants in the South has fallen off, thereby easing freight haulage.

Total revenue carloadings for the first 10 days of September are not quite 5½ per cent above the same period in 1942.

Air Service to Cuba

A new surface and airplane shipping service was inaugurated yesterday between the United States and Cuba by the Acme Overseas Express, a division of Acme Fast Freight, Inc.

Thomas A. Bradley, president of the company, said shippers may deliver their air cargo to Acme stations in any one of 45 cities in the Atlantic and Mid-Western States. Fast trains carry it to Miami, Fla., where it is transferred to the airline, which operates two daily cargo-carrying flights.

Buys 125 Million in Bonds

The Prudential Insurance Company of America has subscribed for $125,000,000 of Treasury bonds in the Third War Loan drive, Franklin D'Olier, president of the company, announced yesterday.

The amount represents about 22 per cent of the New Jersey quota of $583,000,000.

The subscription brings to $650,000,000 the amount of war bonds bought by Prudential in 1943. It bought $525,000,000 during the Second Loan drive.

Safe Deposit Group to Meet

The first meeting of the Safe Deposit Section of the District Bankers Association will be held at the Lee Sheraton Hotel, Thursday evening, September 23.

Marine Risk Rates In Atlantic Reduced

New York, Sept. 15 (AP).—Marine Underwriters announced today that in consideration of Allied military and naval progress, war risk rates on shipments to and from the United Kingdom, the Irish Free State and Northern Ireland were reduced to 4 per cent, the lowest quoted rate since 1940.

Rates, meanwhile, were reduced to 3 per cent on shipments to and from Portugal on Portuguese and Swiss flag vessels, while shipments on other than Portuguese and Swiss flag ships were reduced to 5 per cent. A year ago these rates were 10 per cent.

Giant Toluene Plant Now in Operation

Chicago, Sept. 15 (AP).—The new toulene plant of Standard Oil Co. of Indiana at Whiting, Ind., soon will be shipping more toluene for aerial TNT bombs than all sources in the United States produced in World War I, the company announced today in a report to 96,000 stockholders.

The company, the report continued, also will rank as a leading producer of 100-octane aviation gasoline with the constructon of other new units, most of which will be completed by the end of the year.

Chicago Grain

Chicago, Sept. 15 (AP).—All grain futures moved upward today, with advances in some oats and rye contracts reaching more than a cent. The gains were held throughout the session in some fairly aggressive buying.

Balanced against general lack of selling pressure were such stimulating influences as a strong cash market, firm Winnipeg wheat, improved mill buying, continued tight feed situation, and reports that old corn ceilings might be abandoned and that the Government soon might permit limited whisky distilling.

Wheat closed ¼ to ⅝ up, September, 1.47⅝; December, 1.46¼@1.46⅜; oats were ⅛ to 1⅛ cents higher, September, 77½; and rye ⅝ to 1⅝ cents higher, September, 1.05@1.05⅛.

Bankers Told to Prepare For Postwar Economy Risks

By the Associated Press

New York, Sept. 15.—A. Lee M. Wiggins, newly elected president of the American Bankers Association, said today at the wartime service meeting of the organization that "The American system of free enterprise cannot survive unless chartered banking maintains its independence and fulfills its lawful credit functions."

"Just as bad money drives out good money, so does unsound credit destroy sound credit," said Wiggins, who is president of the Bank of Hartsville, S. C., a town of 6000 population. "No Government subsidy can hide this brutal fact.

Must Accept Risks

"The major corollary of this proposition is that banking and private finance must return to the type of credit that accepts reasonable risks as part of the nature of the business.

"Government guaranteed loans of all types, although recognized as temporary expedients in times of national distress, war or peril, have little if any place in a peacetime credit structure.

"The life or death question which the private credit system must soon answer is whether or not it is willing, able, and ready to take care of the credit requirements of an expanded postwar economy.

"Unless it does so the Government will do the job, and our Nation will take another fateful step down the road of state socialism."

Wiggins, who already has declared that one of the principal objections of his administration of the bankers' association will be protection of country banks from Government competition, said:

Bank Incomes Cut

"Reduced volume of loans, low interest rates and the competition by Government agencies for loans have resulted in a serious deduction in interest income to banks, particularly in agricultural sections.

"In addition to this, the increased costs of doing business and the expense of selling and issuing war bonds have all but wiped out the net profit in many small banks.

"These problems of country banks require and will have foremost consideration by this association in the year ahead."

Railroad List Leads Rally in Quiet Trading

By the Associated Press

New York, Sept. 15.—Rails were popular favorites in today's stock market and their buoyant action in the early proceedings helped to revive for a time some of the recently droopy war shares in the industrial list.

At the top, advances ranged from fractions to around 2 points. The buying movement lost much of its steam before midday, and thereafter gains were reduced and in some instances eliminated. Carriers held a fair part of the improeement along with rubbers, farm implements and specialties. Steels faded near the finish.

There was a sharp break in the preferred stocks of American & Foreign Power in the final hour on the company's announcementt that the Argentine government had ordered a cut in rates of the company's subsidiaries and other utilities operating in the Provinces of Buenos Aires and Mendoza.

The Associated Press 60-stock composite had a closing gain of .2 of a point at 50.1. The rail average advanced .4. The transactions amounted to 595,580 shares, against 439,415 Tuesday.

Choose the Leader . . .

That is part of a letter written by Sergeant Reese, an Eaton man now serving his country in North Africa.

The men and women in Eaton plants—and in industry all over the country—should certainly do what you ask, Sergeant Reese.

This war is not over—in spite of optimistic news from the front.

You and millions of other soldiers have a long tough fight ahead—many lives will yet be lost—much materiel will yet be spent.

Russia must be supplied. China's vast armies must be equipped. Our own boys must have the best—and plenty of it.

We must answer your letter with more of everything.

And in addition to producing war goods in tremendous volume, this country must produce war dollars, too. True, we over-subscribed the Second War Loan drive for 13 billion dollars. But we must do even better on the Third Drive.

That must be America's answer to the challenge of the military aggressors.

That must be our way of saying—"We want to maintain our American brand of freedom—and intend to do it."

America must keep on producing. America must keep on buying Bonds.

After the war is over, Eaton men and women, profiting from war experience, will be better fitted than ever, to do a peacetime job—building finer precision parts for the newer and better products of many kinds that will increase efficiency and ease the load for everybody.

Nelson B. Bell About the Showshops

That Anniversary Bill Continues a Second Week

ANNOUNCEMENT IS MADE this morning that Paramount's "So Proudly We Hail," chosen for the sixteenth anniversary feature at Loew's Capitol Theater and costarring the Misses Colbert, Goddard and Lake, is being held over for a second week of birthday entertainment.

PAULETTE GODDARD

This is no less a tribute to the evolution of the Capitol into something approximating a citadel of the cinema of national importance and repute than a deserved salute to the film celebrating the heroism of the nurses on Bataan and at Corregidor. They were not holding films over at the then Fox Theater back in 1927.

In point of fact, the Fox never quite found its feet until it became Loew's Capitol and the stage bills were transferred half a block to the West from the Palace to the house with Washington's largest seating capacity. One in town only for the week of the Fox's inaugural might easily have gathered a contrary impression.

Our old friend of the tropics, Corpl. Samuel L. Rothapfel, of the U. S. Marine Corps, by then emerged as Samuel L. Rothafel, "Roxy," and generally recognized as "Broadway's great showman" opened the house with a fabulous fanfare, gaited to New York's capacities and price scales. He brought down to the Capital a stage bill of prodigious proportions and exorbitant cost—including a huge chorus that appeared on the stage for about two of the most expensive minutes ever charged against a motion picture house south of Manhattan Island. Had the house been sold out to the last inch of standing-room at every performance, it still would have turned in a deficit absorbing red ink to about the fluid capacity of Lake Erie—which it did. Even so, the theater established itself as an amusement edifice completely justifying its program slogan of "Truly an Achievement."

It remained only to bring the quality of entertainment consistently up to the architectural and decorative preeminence of its environment. That, the Loew interests have done to the point where holdover engagements are by no means restricted to anniversary weeks. The Capitol has been rolling for years now with ever increasing momentum. Birthday or not, congratulations still would be in order to all concerned.

As for "So Proudly We Hail," the record of the past week has demonstrated that it was a judicious selection for the anniversary observance, above and beyond the boastful implications of the title. At virtually every evening performance parties of distinguished representatives of official Washington, the armed forces, the Philippine Commonwealth and others in high places particularly interested in the subject matter of the film have been noted in the audience. Tonight is specifically designated "Nurses' Night," when many nurses from the District and from the Army and Navy Nurse Corps and some from the newly created Cadet Nurse Corps will be in attendance.

The "Perfect Fool" Proves He Isn't

And speaking of replacements, late word from Ed Wynn is that he has stepped up the terpscichorean tempo of his "Big Time," coming into the National next Monday night, by the engagement of Patricia Bowman, Washington's own ballerina, and Paul Haakon, one of the foremost of the stage's male dancers. They will grace the time previously occupied by Gomez and Beatrice, who seem not to have left an indelible imprint on this department's memory—if it has ever seen them. Nobody could ever forget "Pat" and Paul. In addition to which, Frieda Hempel will be among the absentees when "Big Time" opens here, Marie Nash having succeeded to her interludes.

The Hyattsville Theater, the Milo, in Rockville, and the Marlboro, in Upper Marlboro, all in Maryland and a part of Sidney Lust's suburban chain, will stage war bond premieres this month. At the Hyattsville, it will be on Thursday night, September 23, with a single performance, featured by Joan Crawford and Fred MacMurray in "Above Suspicion." The same picture will head the bill at the Milo on Thursday night, September 30, and on Wednesday night, September 22, the Marlboro will "Back the Attack," with "Something to Remember." Admission to these performances will be by purchase of war bonds exclusively, which now are on sale at the respective theaters.

Also bending his shoulder to the Third War Loan push, Henry Hiser makes known that the Bethesda-Chevy Chase area will be served by a war bond showing of Ernst Lubitsch's "Heaven Can Wait," at the Hiser Theater, in Bethesda, on Tuesday night, September 21. This will be under the joint auspices of both the Hiser and Bethesda theaters. There will be only one presentation of the picture, beginning at 8 p. m. Bonds already are on sale at both theaters, seat locations being allotted on the basis of face values of the purchases, ranging through the denominations from $25 to $1000.

The scale of prices for the fortnight's engagement of "Oklahoma," beginning October 18 at the National, will be $3.85 for orchestra seats and $1.10 for the second balcony, at night performances; $2.75 and $1.10 for Wednesday and Saturday matinees. Since this will be a Theater Guild-American Theater Society subscription engagement, only orchestra and second balcony seats are available to nonsubscribers. The first balcony is entirely sold out.

HEDDA HOPPER

A Big One on the Way

Hollywood, Calif., Sept. 15.—I've been looking into the Eddie Rickenbacker picture situation, and here's my report. It'll be made with not a wallop spared, at a huge outlay of money, and let the chips fall where they may, with a couple of American Legion Vets of the last war, Paul Green and Howard Emmett Rogers, picking up the script where Eddie Burke left off . . . Producer Winnie Sheehan tells me a few touchy guys around the country have done a bit of sporadic sounding off but that by and large is tickled silly. A letter from a very important Eastern laborite said in effect: "What's the shouting about? Many prominent visitors go to Moscow and get the brush-off, Rick goes there and is received like a long lost brother, is shown the front, the war plants, everything. Russia is frankly a Communist nation, yet the fellow travelers and boudoir pinks in this country try to make headlines and coddle along the useless drones by lambasting the only Yank that Uncle Joe really fell for. There's something darned haywire about these guys, but if they think they're kidding labor's rank and file they're merely proving what supreme dolts they are" . . . My own comment is that there never was a speaker at any of our war plants around Los Angeles—and we've got plenty of the biggest—who got a more enthusiastic hand from the toilers than Rick. They love him for the magnificent man and inspiring patriot that he is—and if the Capt. Eddie picture isn't one of the biggest grossers in movie history, I'm going to be mighty surprised.

Eddie Rickenbacker

"Olympia" Again

Charlie Brackett and Billy Wilder will do a remake of the Ferenc Molnar play "Olympia," a gay story of Vienna in the 1920's, and are trying to wangle Mary Martin for the top role, hoping the Paramount biggies haven't other plans for her. Play was once done as "Remember the Night." . . . Ben Bogeaus has signed Rinaldo Luza, famed Peruvian artist, to do the portraits of Lyn Bari, Akim Tamiroff, Mimi Forsythe and other principals in "The Bridge of San Luis Rey" and also to be technical director.

Sheridan's Castle

One of these days they'll be hanging a sign on the Ann Sheridan house announcing that "Annie doesn't live here any more." With at least two Latin swains, described by her studio as "fiery," giving her the old rush. Mademoiselle Oomph has acquired a predilection for Mexico and has commissioned an architect to build her a 'dobe castle on the gulf coast at Nautla, where she hopes to get away from it all.

The Feline Touch

When Oona O'Neill moved into the Charlie Chaplin menage as the missus she brought along her three cats. Chaplin doesn't like cats, especially in the same room where he's sleeping, and what he doesn't like usually gets out of the way. Not Oona's cats, though. So he's peeved and issued orders that Oona wasn't to be allowed downstairs during his working hours, which are in the morning. So she's peeved.

Nix Save Joe E

Joe E. Brown's one actor who refuses to play a soldier role. Metro wants him to star in a film based on his adventures in the South Pacific entertaining the servicemen, but Joe says: "I wouldn't stick my neck out after looking at so many real heroes both on the battlefield and in the hospitals . . . Warner's had a time of it begging or borrowing 16 baby buggies for the "Of Thee I Sing" number caroled by Joan Leslie in "Rhapsody in Blue" . . . Jeff Donnell and Bill Anderson have said farewell to New York for good but insist, "We've gone California, not Hollywood."

LEONARD LYONS

Broadway Bulletins

New York, Sept. 15.

When the American occupation of Attu was completed, one of the colonels—whose son is a stamp collector—noticed the postoffice which the Japanese had used on the island. He entered it, and wrote a letter to his son. On the envelope he placed two Jap postage stamps he found there, and then he used the Jap stamp-canceller bearing the Attu postmark . . . the colonel wrote a special note on the envelope: "This is the last letter mailed from the Japanese postoffice at Attu" . . . Then he walked outside, took one last, lingering look at the Jap postoffice, threw a grenade at it—and blew it up.

SIDNEY KINGSLEY

Frank Costello and Joe Adonis have entered the phonograph record business, utilizing a special nonshellac process . . . Charlotte Poilion of the Poilion Sisters, now 61, works as a drill press operator for the American Radio & Hardware Co., turning out 3000 pieces of metal a day, at 56 cents an hour. Before she took the job she completed a course in mechanics . . . Sidney Kingsley, the playwright, who has been in the Army for two years, was commissioned last week as a first lieutenant . . . Sir Archibald Wavell, the new Viceroy of India, is completing an anthology of English poetry before assuming his new duties.

Mamie Eisenhower, wife of the general, lives at the Wardman Annex in Washington. She telephoned the grocery store nearby and asked to have her order delivered as quickly as possible. "I've got to keep an appointment in a hurry," Mrs. Eisenhower explained, "and I'm anxious to leave here soon. So won't you rush it please?" . . . "Listen, lady," said the grocer. "Don't you know there's a war on?" . . . "Mister," replied General Eisenhower's wife, "you're telling me?"

Ernest Hemingway has left Cuba . . . Ray Daniell, head of the New York Times' bureau in London, may become the political advisor of General Devers, commander in chief of the United States Forces, European Theater of Operations . . . Adolphe Menjou insists that he'll stay in England and do a movie for the company which backed Noel Coward's "In Which We Serve" . . . Quentin Reynolds and Lieut. Bruce Cabot slugged it out in Algiers—but then shared a hotel room and became friends . . . Some of the foremost psychiatrists in the Nation will examine Robert Nachack, the 16-year-old boy now under arrest for having committed six robberies.

Maj. George Stevens, the Hollywood director, has been in Africa making Army films. One of the scenes he recorded was the knighting of Air Marshal Sir John Linnell by King George. Stevens set the camera so that the picture would show Sir John kneeling before the King, and in the background 104 Spitfires lined across the desert field . . . His Majesty poised the sword before beginning the ritual of knighthood and asked: "Is this all right, Major?" . . . "If you would move a little to the right," Stevens told the King, "I could get more Spitfires into the picture" . . . "I'll do that," the King agreed. "After all, in this picture the Spitfire should get top billing."

Two unknown Negroes, who've never been on the stage before, will play the leading roles in Billy Rose's production of "Carmen Jones." They're Muriel Smith, a $15-a-week film cleaner in Philadelphia—a protegee of Mme. Schumann and winner of a Curtis Institute scholarship. She'll play "Carmen." And Luther Saxon, who works in the Navy shipyards in Philadelphia will play the role of Don Jose . . . Pancho, the 44-year-old bandleader, who has been leading the band at West Point, was honorably discharged last week. Pancho, a sergeant, couldn't pass the new physical exams . . . Former State Senator McNaboe now is an Air Force captain, stationed in England. One of his colleagues is a lawyer who was one of his interrogators in the Seabury investigation.

Col. Robert Scott, the Flying Tigers hero who wrote the new book, "God Is My Pilot," had to submit his manuscript, as usual to the Army censors. The lieutenant who examined the script objected to Colonel Scott's description of the Civil War as "the war between the States." He suggested that Colonel Scott refer to it as the Civil War, and not as "the war between the States" . . . Colonel Scott, a Southerner, appealed to General Stratemeyer. "That war was over in 1865, wasn't it?" Scott reasoned. "So anything I write about it cannot be considered as revealing military information. Where I come from it was 'the war between the States'" . . . The general sustained him.

L. B. Mayer and other important Hollywood officials now are at the Waldorf, conferring on a program of movies to be exhibited in the occupied territories as soon as the Nazis are driven from there. The OWI will have complete supervision of the selection of films . . . When Eleanor Roosevelt learned before her current trip to the Pacific, that her secretary, Malvina Thompson, would be unable to accompany her, Mrs. Roosevelt began to study typing. Now during her trip, she does her own secretarial work . . . Willie Bryant and Kenneth Spencer will head the first all-Negro unit touring the overseas Army bases . . . Claude Cockburn, editor of London's leftist The Week, has been missing since he arrived in North Africa a few weeks.

LOUELLA O. PARSONS

Another Dinner for the 'Beard'!

Hollywood, Sept. 15 (INS).—Twentieth Century-Fox lost no time in nabbing Martha Cheavens' story, "Sunday Dinner for a Soldier." If it has the same heart tugs (and it sounds like it) as "Penny Serenade," it should make a marvelous movie. Walter Morosco, who will produce it, has already cast Mary Anderson and Monty Woolley in the leads. That's good casting, for the story concerns a girl and her grandfather. (Hope Monty won't mind being called a grandpa).

MONTY WOOLLEY

The story concerns a family, very poor, held together by Mary and Monty. They scrimp and save for months in order to have a Sunday dinner for a soldier.

One of those stories that leak out reached me as I was about to cover the typewriter for the day. The story is that Joseph Kennedy, former Ambassador to England, will finance Edmund Goulding in an independent movie company. I have no verification and I know Eddie must make the Joan Crawford picture for Warners December 1, but I am told that Kennedy, who was active in pictures for some years, will give Goulding the money and let him decide through which company he wishes to release his product. Kennedy, who was formerly a Boston banker, has often lent money to various movie enterprises.

Ever since Roz Russell read "Roughly Speaking," she has been crazy about the Louise Randall Pierson story. The yarn about the woman who used steamroller tactics in bringing up her family in the midst of various and assorted careers was so loudly praised by Roz it finally got around to Producer Henry Blanke's ears. So when Mrs. Pierson arrived on the Warner lot to huddle about the adaptation of her best-seller, Henry invited the ladies to meet. The upshot is there's the best chance in the world that when the script of "Roughly Speaking" is completed in about 10 weeks, Rosalind will play the star role.

Chatter in Hollywood: and still the Bob Hope stories keep coming. One of the highlights of Bob's African jaunt was dining with Gen. Jimmy Doolittle. When Bob walked in, Jimmy (with tongue in cheek) greeted him, "Well, well, well—Mr. Benny. We are certainly delighted to have you here. We listen to all your broadcasts with Mary, Rochester and Phil Harris. Yes, Mr. Benny, it is certainly nice to have you in Africa." To which Bob replied: "Well, well, well, it certainly is nice to be here, General Arnold."

Keyes to Charm

one of the prides and joys of the Columbia studios, where she is currently engaged in an item quaintly called "There's Something About a Soldier."

Little Revives a Powerful Film

By Marjorie Kelly

The central problem of "Souls at Sea," whether it is ever right for a man to kill another, seems a bit academic at this time, but as sheer adventure the Little Theater's present revival has not diminished in the least in interest since 1938, when it was first shown.

The story, involving Gary Cooper as "Nuggin'" Taylor, opens with the closing remarks of the prosecution in Taylor's trial for manslaughter. Taylor had killed 18 people when the William Brown went down, in order to save 20 others. The defense is that if he had not killed any, they would all have died, because with such a load the small lifeboat would have been swamped. The prosecution contends that he saved himself and that only God has the right to decide who shall live and who shall not, as he had done in this instance. In peacetime, an interesting problem.

Told in Flashbacks

From there on, the story of how Nuggin' Taylor came to do this thing is told in flashbacks, beginning with a dramatic incident on board the slave ship Blackbird, which led to his taking command of the ship. The captain hated to hear the Africans in the hold singing, and to quiet them he used the lash. But one caught the end of his whip, and pulled him down into the hold over them. When Taylor got him out he lived just long enough to turn over command of the ship.

This scene is a harrowingly powerful one, with the singing of the blacks, the rhythmic clank of their chains and the primitive fury, blazing up from long hate, with which they attack the slave trader.

When, a few days later the Blackbird is picked up by an English patrol ship and found to have no slaves in her hold, it looks very peculiar. So Taylor is taken to England to determine whether his story—that he released the slaves and allowed them to swim ashore when they reached an island—is to be believed; or whether he is to be hanged as a slave trader, and worse, a man who drowned his human cargo to avoid being apprehended.

Suspicion Strengthened

To the British Admiralty the incident seems to verify a suspicion they have had regarding Taylor. He has been mixed up in the slave trade for a long while, but somehow something always seems to happen to any slave ship he is on. On this one the slaves were simply released. Could it be a one-man war against slavery?

It turns out to be such, and the Admiralty gives him a commission to help them in their larger-scale war against the traffic. It is on his way to America to execute this commission that the ship he is on explodes and he is forced to kill in order to save lives.

Gary Cooper, as the central character, gives one of those performances which have placed him among America's best-loved actors. As the adventurer he is convincing and has much charm. George Raft is acceptable as Nuggin' Taylor's friend Powdah; Frances Dee is very attractive playing opposite Cooper, and Olympe Bradna gently sweet in the role of the lady's maid who wanted to go to America to find a n[illegible] and better life.

Variety of Newsreels

Short subjects include No. 2 of the March of Time's issues on "India at War." It spends a good deal of time apologizing for British rule in India but covers a situation of great interest fairly fully. The cartoon is a Mickey Mouse about the difficulties Pluto meets in getting his master a morning paper. Latest newsreels deal mainly with the Third War Loan Campaign, showing the Cavalcade of Stars at the "Back the Attack" show and parading down Washington streets.

Margo Gauges Gaze Of Beauty Judges

Hollywood.—Margo claimed to know just where judges at a beauty contest do not gaze—and set out to prove it.

The feminine star of RKO Radio's "Gangway for Tomorrow" upheld her point in a debate with her producer-director, John Auer. He said she was all wrong.

Later he lined up contestants for a duplication of the "Miss America" event held annually on Atlantic City's Boardwalk. Along the line of bathing beauties he moved posing first one, then another.

After he had posed "Miss Utah," he got two numbers farther beefore her loud laughter swung him about. Then rising anger gave way to sheepishness. "Miss Utah" was not Miss Utah but Margo who, not in the scene, had donned bathing suit, slipped in just the same.

"See," said Margo. "I was right. Judges never look at the face."

WAC Advises on Film

Capt. Sally Davis of the WAC, Bureau of Public Relations, arrived in Hollywood and checked in at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Studio recently, to begin new duties as technical adviser on "Women in Uniform," story of the Women's Army Corps.

Working in cooperation with George Bruce, who is writing the screenplay and George Haight, producer, Captain Davis will supply all necessary information concerning the spirit of the corps, and its regulations.

The Washington Merry-Go-Round

By Drew Pearson

THE DEADLOCK between Secretary Hull and former Governor Lehman of New York over the administration of foreign relief is expected to be broken by congressional action soon.

This is one of the first things to come before Congress, and will also test out Republicans as to whether they will go along with the lofty principles of world cooperation espoused at Mackinac Island.

Congress will be asked to authorize a new international agency probably called the United National Relief and Rehabilitation Administration. On its executive committee will sit representatives of Great Britain, Russia and China, as well as an American chairman.

The White House has already given private assurances to Governor Lehman that he will be made chairman. To this end, Lehman shortly will resign as head of the Foreign Relief and Rehabilitation Administration, where he has not been happy since it was placed under the State Department. Lehman has felt that the State Department was a policy organization, not geared for administrative functions, and that his work had bogged down.

In the last war, Herbert Hoover's food administration functioned as a separate agency, and the new international organization to be created by Congress will also be independent, though Lehman is anxious to cooperate with the State Department on all policy matters.

Note: Isolationist GOP Senator Vandenberg of Michigan vigorously opposed to US commitments for postwar relief two months ago, has now been won over by Assistant Secretary of State Dean Acheson and will support the new Lehman organization when it is debated on the Senate floor.

White House Grass

WHITE HOUSE Gardener William Reeves recently looked disconsolately over the grounds, burnt brown by a hot, dry summer. Lacking an automatic sprinkler system (such as the grounds of the Japanese Embassy still enjoy), the White House lawn had suffered sorrowfully.

But since then one day of heavy rain has turned the grass from brown to green again. There are some bare spots, but new grass is being planted for the fall and winter covering. Reeves is using a mixture made up of 85 per cent bluegrass, 7 per cent red top, 5 per cent clover and 3 per cent colonial bent.

He is omitting the Italian rye this season, because it is actually too good. The rye springs up so fast that it requires regular cutting until frost. The White House has its own manpower problem, and lacks the help to keep the mowers going.

For all who want to revive their lawns for the fall, Reeves says this is the ideal time to reseed.

NOTE: The White House tennis court is kept ready for use, though it has had no players since last year.

Capital Chaff

WHILE CONGRESSIONAL solons were away, the housecleaners have been busy. All the paintings on sightseers' row have been cleaned, statues have been given a much-needed bath, and the subways leading to the Senate and House Office Buildings are resplendent with a fresh coat of paint . . . Also, the shuttle cars in the Senate subway have been refitted with new wicker seats . . . Looking at the hefty girth of Senator Edwin C. Johnson of Colorado, who tips the beam above 225 pounds, you would never guess that he eats only one meal a day . . . David Lynn, architect of the Capitol, and Arthur "Gus" Cook, its supervising engineer, have had only nine days off in seven years . . .

Russians Disappointed

EAGLE-EYED Senator Bill Langer of North Dakota has just come back from a trip through Alaska, during which he probed into a lot more than the average junketing Congressman.

One thing he looked into was the shipment of airplanes to Russia via Alaska. It is no longer a military secret that US planes are being delivered by this Siberian Great Circle route, and Senator Langer dropped in for a chat with two Russians who were piloting planes across the Bering Straits.

One was Col. P. S. Kisilev, chief of the Russian military mission in Fairbanks; the other, Technical Sergt. Inspector George A. Timofiev. Both expressed indignation that the United States had not lived up to its agreement regarding plane deliveries.

"When Harry Hopkins was in Moscow," complained Colonel Kisilev, "he promised us a certain number of planes per month. But we have not been getting them. The most we ever got was about 30 per cent during August. And they are all fighters. We need also big bombers."

The Russians felt that the United States should live up to the promises or not promise at all.

Merry-Go-Round

THE Louisiana delegation in Congress isn't too keen about the appointment of Judge Dawkins to fill the Circuit Court judgeship which Jimmy Allred of Texas didn't get. Apparently, Judge Dawkins was too tough with the Huey Long crowd . . . Justice Department officials still say that of all the judicial candidates coming before them recently, Judge Allred was the best qualified. Republican politics plus howls from Louisiana defeated him . . . Among the canniest officials of OCD is Stanley McCandless, on leave from Yale University. At Yale, he was a stage-lighting expert. With OCD, he is a blackout expert . . . At the Mayflower cocktail lounge, Honduran Ambassador Julian Caceras got stuck in an arm chair, and waiters had to pull the chair off of the Ambassador's rotund form.

Burma Pulverized, Gen. Haynes Says

New Delhi, Sept. 15 (AP).—Brig. Gen. Caleb Haynes, who has been directing American task forces based in India and coordinating air attacks against Burma, asserted today that nine-tenths of the facilities of that country have been pulverized by Allied air attacks. Burma is no Japanese fortress, he declared.

Haynes, known as "Old Grizzly" to pilots, has been ordered to the United States to take a new post. He has been on 20 bombing missions against Japanese bases in Burma.

Washington Worsteds are tailored for the "white collar man." Sitting at a desk all day or making a hurried trip to a wartime business conference subjects the average suit to weakening the fabric tensile strength. Actual tests show that wool worsteds will resist wearing strain and stay neater over a longer period of time.

Our all wool Washington Worsteds have been tailored with hand details at many important points. They have been expressly made "to do the job" not just the first few weeks but through the long months ahead. The weight is right for year round wear. Single and double breasted styles in grey, blue and brown.

Distressful Tale Of a Blond Secretary

This is what you'd call a BEAUTIFUL story: A blonde Georgia beauty came here to take a stenographic job in the War Department and she was immediately chosen by a discriminating colonel for his secretary. They were getting along very nicely, thank you, until the day when the colonel dictated a letter to a former commanding officer and in it he used this language to opologize for not having written sooner: "I'm sorry but I have been occupied with new duties in the Pentagon." The steno, her friends said, misunderstood the colonel and the letter went out this way: "I'm sorry but I have been occupied with new beauties in the Pentagon." P. S. The stern old colonel, who doesn't have a sense of humor, had his blonde beauty fired.

KLUTTZ

War Manpower employes will take another vote next week to elect an employe representative on its board of efficiency rating appeals. The run-off will be among these four candidates: Ed Gallagher, who polled 115 votes; Robert Clark, 106; Harold Jewell, 84, and Ray King, 45 . . . Four top-flight newsmen in War's Bureau of Public Relations have submitted their resignations in protest against being reclassified to lower-grade jobs. They have been followed by four clerical employes and more will trail them . . . Prime Minister Churchill brought President Roosevelt three rare prints on his recent visit here. One was of New York's Broadway in the early days, and the two others were of ships.

It isn't generally known, but War Production Board is said to have the largest collection of top technical and professional people of any Federal agency and only 132 of them are deferred from the draft . . . Office of Price Administration, incidentally, has released a large percentage of its draft-deferred employes and now only 13 are deferred out of 13,082 male employes which is less than 1/100 of 1 per cent. The record is probably unequaled by a private war industry. Nearly 850 OPA employes are in the military service. Fifty-six deferments have been granted but 43 of them have been cancelled and the men are now in the service.

Office of Censorship is making job utilization surveys of its employes that are bringing about outstanding economies. In the first place, it set up reasonable standards of work for its employes and the offices that don't produce up to the standards are immediately examined by the national office here. Reports from the Miami office, for example, indicated there wasn't enough work to keep the employes busy. Production wasn't up to standards. The office was surveyed and more than 500 employes were ordered separated. A check is now being made at the New York office. The agency, which has in the neighborhood of 15,000 workers, is expected to operate below its '44 budget but, of course, that'll depend on war developments.

The Federal Bureau of Investigation has one of the very best systems to keep a constant check on its employes to make sure they have plenty of work. The bureau has never been accused of being overstaffed and it has expanded several times since the war and has had the difficult task of recruiting and properly placing thousands of new people. At the end of each day the employe must hand in a report telling in detail the work accomplished. The typist records the number of letters written, etc. In the field, the daily reports are audited by the agent in charge and the bureau chiefs do the job here. Once a year the field offices are ordered to send in the reports to the national office for audit. And they never know when the order will be requested. By this method the FBI keeps a constant check on its employes and idle persons are soon discovered.

OPA Deputy Administrator Ned Hay formerly was associated with a Philadelphia bank where only three persons were in the payroll section. OPA, three times the bank's size, has more than 30 employes working on payrolls and Hay questioned whether it really took all those people to do the work. He did the obvious thing; payroll employes were sent to Philadelphia to study the bank system and they returned the other day with the secrets of the bank's shortcuts, and now they're convinced the section can be overhauled and far fewer employes will be able to do the work.

Assistant President Byrnes and his staff are now studying the proposed reorganization plans for the State Department. Some of the people around Assistant Secretary Dean Acheson insist that State bodily take over Lend Lease, Office of Economic Warfare, the Rockefeller and Lehman agencies. The best bet, however, is that each of the agencies will continue to be semi-independent, and that State won't become an operating agency, but will continue to be the policy maker. And if that happens, OEW will continue without major changes and it won't be cut in half and shelved, as is being rumored.

D. C. Reaches 1/4 of Bond Drive Quota

Battle of Salerno Is New Talking Point As Leaders Strain To Increase Sales

Purchase late yesterday of $3,350,000 worth of securities in the Third War Loan by the Perpetual Building Association, 500 11th st. nw., brought the District's reported total to $23,550,000, which is more than one-quarter of the 94 million quota in about one-third of the alloted time for the campaign, the drive committee reported last night.

And with further sales reports to be issued late today or tomorrow by the Fifth Federal Reserve Bank at Richmond, tabulator for this area, it was expected the slump in sales of the past few days would be eliminated as a determined public dug down even deeper than they did the first two days of the campaign when Washingtonians led the Nation in percentage of quota sales.

The Perpetual Building Association check was handed to Lynn Allison, radio and stage vocalist, who sold the securities. It was given her by Edward G. Baltz, secretary of the association. He said his company had purchased $1,250,000 in bonds during the Second War Loan.

Immediately after the sale was made by Miss Allison, the committee said G. W. Butler, district manager for the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, announced that his company will allocate $300,000 to the District campaign.

News from the Salerno front in Italy has aroused an already irate public which now sees that the "surrender" of Italy does not mean a clear path ahead, but fighting in which American soldiers must battle every foot of the way.

In recognition of the Salerno struggle, in which losses have been reported heavy, the Treasury Department has designated tomorrow as "Black Salerno Day."

As local campaign workers, without the resources of a State to back their totals, continued their tasks, reports came in that Delaware, one of the smallest States in the Union, held top place in the Treasury's first Nation-wide progress report; New York drew special commendation for placing second. Delaware has achieved 34 per cent of its quota of 49 million. New York has sold 28 per cent of its quota of $4,709,000,000.

There is mounting evidence of increased momentum in the local drive, workers say.

Granville Gude, owner of Gude Bros., florists, announced that all persons purchasing bonds at any one of the firm's three stores tomorrow and Saturday would be presented flowers, with three appropriately named "better times" roses going with a $25 bond, six with the $50 bond and a dozen with each $100 bond.

An orchid will be presented to buyers of bonds costing $500 and more. Gude also announced that a quota of $150,000 had been set for the two days and that Dixie Rafter, "Miss Washington," would have charge of the bond sales and floral presentations at the company's 1212 F st. nw., store both days.

The employes of International Business Machines Corp. announced they have payroll deductions for war bonds of 11 per cent and that there are indications that the drive there will net approximately $25,000.

The Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. employes yesterday reached a total of $80,000 and today began shooting for the $100,000 mark.

James Spain, war bond chairman for local liquor dealers, announced that 80 dealers so far have bought or sold $100,000 in bonds. Woodward & Lothrop employes announced that a committee of 125 of their personnel had been appointed to contact everyone in the store every Wednesday to swell the District's total.

terials used—things like 1100 miles of copper telephone wire. I speak now only of weapons and combat vehicles destroyed by the enemy or otherwise put out of service—weapons and combat vehicles which must be replaced at once—and ten times over!"

He said that nearly half of the 57-mm. guns used in Sicily were gone forever, more than a third of the 75-mm. motor carriages sent into Sicily are lost.

"Let management spend less time telling the public what a magnificent job it is doing. . . . Let labor think less about the fun it's going to have on Saturday night.

Fighting for Life

"At this Army show in Washington, clustered around me are the gigantic weapons of modern mechanized war. Let us not forget for one moment that these weapons are for the purpose of killing Germans and Japanese.

"We must kill them or they will kill us.

"We are fighting for our lives.

"The words 'Back the Attack' are no mere slogan. They exactly describe what we must do and do now if we are to win this war. With every ounce of energy at our command, with the utmost effort of which we are capable, we must "Back the Attack"this month—and next month—and the month after."

Secretary Morgenthau's reference to the 57-mm. gun brought to light a weapon unheard of previously by the American public. The 57-mm. is an improved version of the British six pounder, principally used as an antitank gun.

$4,000 In Attendance

Preceding the Secretary of the Treasury, W. F. Reynolds, commissioner of the Public Buildings Administration, urged those present to support the Third War Loan.

Twenty-seven AAF heroes, all of whom saw action in Sicily, Africa and the Middle East, were special guests of Secretary Morgenthau at the night action show of "Back the Attack."

Eighty-four thousand visitors poured onto the Mnument Grounds to visit the Army's magnificant show, which the Treasury Department asked them to present to the public.

It was the last day of the first full week of the great exposition, and although only one-third concluded the attendance mark was edging toward the million mark. More than 731,000 citizens of Washington and visitors have passed through the three entrances of "Back the Attack" since noon September 9.

The immense spectacle is sponsored by The Washington Post.

The Army's latest secret weapon—the antitank rocket gun, or Bazooka—was exposed to reporters, cameramen and Army officials in a preview early yesterday, later to be displayed with the ordnance and small-arms exhibit on the grounds.

The Bazooka rocket, a lineal descendent of the World War I rifle grenade, is heavier and more elongated—shaped similar to an aerial bomb.

The launcher or gun is about 50 inches long, a metal tube less than 3 inches in diameter, and a product of extended experiment by the Ordnance Department.

The tube is open at both ends.

A shoulder stock and front and rear grips are attached for the firer. The gun has sights and an electric battery which sets off the rocket propelling charge when the launcher trigger is pulled.

A two-man team operates the Bazooka—a firer and loader.

The weapon under certain conditions has been used effectively against enemy tanks. The Bakooka supplements rather than supersedes other weapons and is now against enemy tanks. The Bazooka classes of troops.

Can Pierce Armor

Raiding groups, tank-hunting parties and reconnaissance elements have reported it highly effective. The Army said the projectile is capable of piercing the armor of any tank thus far in action against Allied troops.

Despite rumors of a possible "road show" for the great mass of armament, material, supplies and trained personnel which make up the display now on the Washington Monument Grounds, "a definite decision has been made to disband the show after the current exhibition ends," said Maj. John H. Galloway, the show's public relations officer.

"Our leaders have been telling us the hard truth," Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes said to the great grandstand audience during the afternoon, "that some of us wouldn't believe until we met the withering fire of the enemy in Italy. The Nazis and Japs are fighting with the fury of animals at bay trying to hold back the Allies that are moving in for the kill . . .

Tough Fighters Needed

"We must do what is necessary to win this war . . .

"There isn't anything more important in this war than tough and well-equipped fighting men. It takes money to provide this equipment . . . a great part of that money must come from you—now, in exchange for War Bonds."

Secretary Ickes was preceded by Maj. Gen. E. B. Gregory, the Quartermaster General of the Army, who welcomed the crowds to "Quartermaster Day" at "Back the Attack," and urged every member of the audience that "every item of equipment you see here costs money—money provided by the War Bonds you purchase."

A high light of the quartermaster arena show which occurred at 5:15 p. m. was the "farewell appearance" of Col. Hirman Tuttle, veteran Cavalry officer, who has been with the Quartermaster Remount Service many years.

Colonel Tuttle's "dressage" act is tops in the equine world. He appeared before the war in Paris, Berlin, London and, later, Madison Square Garden as one of the Army's great horsemen.

As hard-bitten as Phil Sheridan, as stern as Custer, Colonel Tuttle's riding with his two mounts, Olympic and Vast, was one of the real treats of the entire week of "Back the Attack."

Something New

Arriving in Washington from the famous old Cavalry post at Fort Riley, Kans., where he has been recently stationed, Colonel Tuttle reported at once to "Back the Attack," and his act with his two trained mounts arranged. One of them gallops backward, changing its lead without coming to a halt.

It is the world's only horse which has been trained to accomplish the feat.

For many years Colonel Tuttle was executive officer of the Quartermaster Remount Service, which procures, breeds and helps train all the horses for the Army.

Colonel Tuttle retires from the service October 1.

Distinguished guests Wednesday at "Back the Attack" were Maj. Gen. D. H. Pratt and Mrs. Pratt. General Pratt is deputy director general, British ministry of supply mission; Maj. Gen. G. M. Barnes, chief, Technical Division, Ordnance Department; Col. W. A. Borden, Col. S. B. Ritchie, Col. I. A. Luke, Col. Rene Studler, Col. B. R. Olmsted, Col. A. B. Johnson, Lieut. Col. A. B. Weaver

And from the Navy Department, distinguished guests were Capts. W. A. Kitts, G. D. Linke, H. L. Merring, W. W. Juvenel; S. E. Burroughs, R. H. Roberts, A. G. Zimmerman and E. W. McKee and 40 other officers.

Four Chaplains Killed in War Honored at 'Back the Attack'

By Robert Tate Allan

The Post Church Editor

"They do not march alone."

That theme of the Army chaplains' exhibit at the "Back the Attack" war show dramatizes the valor of today's "sky pilots," who drop with paratroopers, ride with the infantry and die with their boys.

Four of the chaplains whose pictures adorn the wall in the white frame chapel went down praying when their ship was torpedoed. They gave their lifebelts to drowning comrades. One of the heroes was Alexander D. Goode of 5131 2d st. nw., first Jewish chaplain to die in this war. His widow, Mrs. Theresa F. Goode, has received the Purple Heart award for him.

The other three chaplains who died with Goode were Clark V. Poling, a Protestant, and son of Dr. Daniel A. Poling, president of the World Christian Endeavor Society, who is well known here; George L. Fox, a Methodist, and Father John P. Washington, Roman Catholic. Lettered on the booth near their pictures is the biblical inscription: "Greater love hath no man than this."

Nearby are likenesses of two other chaplains who died in service. Lieut. Col. Frank L. Miller, 1920 35th st. nw., of the Army Chief of Chaplains Office, and Maj. Robert H. Humphrey of Lynchburg, Va. They died with Bishop Adna Wright Leonard and others in a plane crash in Iceland May 3, while touring the fighting fronts.

Sixteen Army chaplains have been killed in action since Pearl Harbor, 33 are war prisoners, and 2 are missing in action.

According to Chaplain Fred W. Kern, a Lutheran, who is supervising the chaplains' exhibit, 160,000 persons have viewed it thus far.

Supply Men Demonstrate At War Show

Quartermasters Hold Spotlight In 'Back Attack' Arena Display

Fighting quartermasters of the United States Army had their Day yesterday and while having it, gave thousands a thrill at a late afternoon, one-time only, special demonstration in the Back the Attack show arena on the Washington Monument Grounds.

Starting with appearance of a float bearing massed flags of the republic's wars, the fighting quartermasters, who direct the greatest buying organization on earth, held the crowd spellbound for more than an hour.

Most thrilling part of the demonstration of machines, guns and men was a simulated truck convoy attack, during which the quartermasters showed their alert defensive skill. By loudspeaker transcriptions the sound of enemy planes beat down on the arena, where the quartermasters halted their trucks. Members of the convoy seized rifles and took up combat positions. In the end, the trucks moved on toward imaginary battle lines.

Thousands saw for the first time the complete number of uniforms worn by the men and women of the armed service. Two platform trucks around the arena with men and women wearing the camouflaged uniforms for jungle fighters, the white of northern troops, tropical clothing of desert warriors, overseas uniforms of the nurses' corps, standard battle dress, WAC street uniforms, and the trouser-in-boot attire of paratroopers.

They saw valued dogs in action, keyed to every word and move of their soldier masters, unconcerned with the noise of simulated plane motors that roarded from loud speakers. They thrilled to the "Fighting Quartermasters," who supply the food, munitions and equipment in the heat of battle and they came away convinced, they said, that the corps deserved the title of "Fighting Quartermasters."

D. C. Flier Ace Strafer In Pacific Area

As enemy aircraft lined up for the dawn patrol takeoff from Japheld Kahili Airdrome on Bougainville in the Solomons, a young Washington Marine Corps ace swooped out of a cloud and gunned eight of the Zeros.

In his short sortie he had grounded many other planes in the first of three strafings in less than a week at Kahili, a delayed Associated Press report from Munda Airdrome stated yesterday.

The local flier is First Lieut. Alvin J. Jensen, son of Mrs. Catherine Jensen of 1236 11th st. nw., who already had six Japlanes to his credit. A former Washington Post carrier boy, he has been stationed in the Southwest Pacific for the past six months.

According to the Associated Press, Jensen was one of 16 Corsair pilots on the early mission. He too kthe strafing job alone after he had told his commanding officer that it was "a lot easier to knock them off on the ground than knock them down out of the air."

Mrs. Jensen said last night that she was thrilled to hear of her son's latest air achievement. With the release of the story, she learned for the first time that he had been promoted to first lieutenant.

Jensen, 23, attended Washington-Lee High School and Woodrow Wilson High School. Later, he was employed at the Government Printing Office. Before he was called into service, he received a private pilot's license from the CAA. He received his wings at Pensacola, Fla., last April and in October landed at Pearl Harbor for overseas duty.

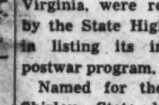
Coolidge Foundation Begins Cycle of 8 Brahms Concerts

By Ray C. B. Brown

Elisabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress presents on Wednesday night the first of eight concerts devoted to the chamber music of Johannes Brahms. Artists: The Coolidge Quartet (William Kroll, David Gillet, Jascha Veissi and Naoum Benditzki) and Carlton Cooley, viola. Program: String Quintet in F major, Op. 88; String Quartet in A minor, Op. 51, No. 2; String Quintet in G major, Op. 111.

Coolidge Auditorium is the Library of Congress held a demonstrative audience last evening when the Coolidge Quartet began an eight-concert cycle of the chamber music of Brahms, in which various assisting artists will participate. Carlton Cooley played the second viola in this opening program which contained the two string quintets and the A minor string quartet. William Kroll and his associates were in excellent form and performed with a consentience that promises much enjoyment for all devoted Brahmians.



BROWN

There are two ways of presenting cycles of this kind, and each has its advantages. One is the chronological, which affords an opportunity to observe the development of the composer, and the other is the hit-and-miss method, which brings together works of unequal quality and of different periods for the purpose of contrast. The latter procedure has been adopted in this cycle, and the initial program displayed the workmanship of Brahms at the ages of 40, 49 and 57.

Little is to be learned about development in the case of Brahms, who was an extremely self-critical composer and conscientious artist. The length of time he waited before composing his first symphony is typical of his carefulness in placing his musc before the public. Konrad Huschke is authority for the statement that Brahms destroyed more than twenty string quartets before he came out with his first chamber music works.

The A minor quartet played last evening dates from 1873 when Brahms still retained his youthful appearance, described by one who sang in a chorus under his direction as "rather delicate, slim looking, with a beardless face of idealistic expression." Brahms himself put in years later to Widmann: "I suppose I did look somewhat like a doubtful candidate for the ministry in those days." The beardless face goes well with this quartet, which is quite Schubertian in quality.

The two string quintets represent the fundamental position of Brahms as a preserver of classical traditions in the full stream of romanticism. Standing as the antithesis of Eagner, he refused to write "the music of the future," but looked ever backward for his ideals of form and expression. Lacking the originality of genius, he had nobility of thought and high artistic integrity, and with these means he wrote music of melodic beauty and enduring strength.

Virginia Has Four Million Road Project

Virginia's outstanding postwar project will be the four-million-dollar Henry G. Shirley Memorial Highway, extending south from the Pentagon Building network near Washington.

Plans for the 17-mile artery, the first limited access highway in Virginia, were revealed yesterday by the State Highway Department in listing its initial $12,000,000 postwar program.

Named for the late Henry G. Shirley, State highway commissioner for 19 years, the road will have four 12-foot pavement lanes divided by depressed median strips of varying widths. State plans also provide that the Memorial Highway will have a maximum curvature of 1 per cent and maximum grade of 3.5 per cent.

The minimum width of the right of way will be 300 feet. Access to the highway will be limited to certain connecting roads for which adequate structures and interchanges for traffic are provided. There will be no crossings at grade on the entire 17 miles covered by this project.

The Shirley Highway will extend through the northwest portion of Alexandria, cross the Southern Railway at Springfield, parallel the RF&P Railroad from a point just north of Lorton until it intersects US Route 1 near Woodbridge, according to State plans.

Other Projects Listed

Other outstanding postwar projects will include completion of a bypass of Route 1 around Fredericksburg. This project, to cost about $700,000, involves the construction of a grade separation structure and interchange to cross Route 3 and four 11-foot lanes of pavement, divided by a depressed grass strip. The bypass starts at the south end of the recently completed bridge over the Rappahannock River north of Fredericksburg, extends south on new location, and ties in with Route 1 about 4 miles south.

D. C. Gardeners Compete Today For Prizes

Gardeners and nongardeners alike will have a chance to view the fruits and vegetables of Washington's labor today between 7:30 p. m. and 10:30 p. m. at the Washington Gas Light Auditorium, 11th and H sts. nw.

Both canned and fresh fruits and vegetables will be displayed for judging at this first annual exhibit and contest of the District's victory garden committee, and prizes will be awarded at 8:30 p. m. by a grand awards team which inspected 50 entrants selected as outstanding by area chairmen.

Those planning to enter exhibit contests must bring their canned goods or vegetables to the auditorium between 1 and 5 p. m. through the H st. entrance, the victory garden office announced. Two jars each of five varieties must be presented for an exhibit to be judged in the canned produce unit, and fresh vegetables must be brought in numbers announced in yesterday's paper by the committee. These numbers may be checked with the victory garden office through the District switchboard, National 6000.

Prizes in war bonds and stamps will be awarded as follows: for gardens, $100 grand prize, eight regional prizes of $25, eight regional second prizes of $10, and $10 and $5 prizes in each of the defense areas; for canned goods, $25, $10 and $5; for vegetables, $5 for each of 20 varieties of vegetables, with a $10 sweepstakes prize.

Washington Fails To Observe New Volunteer Dimout

Washington failed to observe the inauguration of the National volunteer conservation dimout last night.

Lights in store windows, on theaters, garages, night clubs and many other establishments continued to burn brightly after 10 p. m., the hour the new volunteer dimout became effective throughout the Nation.

A civilian defense parade will be staged Sunday at 2:30 p. m. from 44th st. ne. to the District line and Capitol View to Deanewood to signalize the opening of the new CD headquarters for Area 51, at 50th and Grant sts. ne., Bernard Chapman, deputy warden, announced yesterday.

25 Take Ground Courses

More than 25 students are enrolled in the aviation ground school courses at Southeastern University, 1736 G st. nw., President James A. Bell announced yesterday. Instruction is in charge of R. A. Seelig, a member of the Civil Air Patrol.

D. C. Budget Hearing Set Tomorrow

Large Delegations Of Citizens to Attend Annual Finance Session

District residents, both individuals and organizations, will have the opportunity beginning tomorrow at 10 a. m. to appear before the Commissioners and voice their recommendations for any proposed changes in the department budgets, aggregating more than $67,000,000, which recently have been submitted for approval.

The hearings will take place in the board room of the District Building and thus far 26 civic, church and business organizations have signified their intention of participating.

To Commend Health

Harry S. Wender, president of the Federation of Citizens Associations, said yesterday his constituents were mostly concerned with the acquisition of additional property for postwar construction of schools, recreation facilities and other public benefits.

He said the organization would especially commend the Health Department for their recent crusade on dirty restaurants, grocery stores and other food-handling establishments.

Wender said among others the Board of Education, the Recreation Department, the Board of Public Welfare, the Health Department and the Department of Vehicles and Traffic would be especially commended for their proposed budgets.

He said matters pertaining to the Water Department would be delayed until after the current investigation is completed by the corporation counsel's office.

Large Delegation

Those organizations which have indicated they will testify are the Federation of Citizens Associations, the Federation of Civic Associations, the Board of Trade, Brookland Citizens Association, Rhode Island Avenue Citizens Association, Progressive Citizens Association of Georgetown, Petworth Citizens Association, Citizens Association of Chevy Chase and the Barry Farms Citizens Association.

Others will be the Marshall Height Civic Association, East Central Civic Association, Howard Park Civic Association, Far Northeast Council, Washington Taxpayers Association, Hearst Elementary School, Association for the Education of Handicapped Shut-in Children, Jewish Social Service Agency, Outdoor Cleanliness Association of the District, Catholic University of America, Council of Social Agencies, Washington Building Congress, United Office and Professional Workers of America, Maryland and District Industrial Union Council, Citizens Advisory Committee (Housekeeping Aide), Animal Rescue League and Mrs. Prentiss Willson, as an individual.

Precinct Jail Empty

For the first time in six months, the cell blocks at the Thirteenth Metropolitan Police Precinct became vacant at noon yesterday. But it was only for an hour. Two occupants were provided about 1 p. m.

Counting by Weight

An ultrasensitive weighing machine to check the accuracy of dealers' deposits of ration stamps in ration banking accounts has been introduced in the District OPA, local officials announced yesterday.

Use of the new machine permits retailers, who previously were limited to 500 stamps in an envelope for deposit in a ration banking account, to make single deposits of 2000 and 5000 stamps.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Ardent Desire to Be Married Develops Between Young Couple, Before Girl's Mother Realizes That Man Is Her Illegitimate Son; What to Do?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I desperately need the advice of some disinterested person who may be able to see a way out of my tangle. To give you the background of the problem, I must go back to the last war. At that time, I became emotionally involved with a young soldier. I was much too young to realize the seriousness of my actions. When the soldier (whom I shall call Jim) left for overseas, I was panic stricken to find myself pregnant. Afraid to tell my own people, I wrote to Jim's parents, who sent me enough money to see me through the ordeal,—on condition that I give them my child and never try to see it again. To this I agreed, hoping in the bottom of my heart that when Jim came back we would be married and reclaim our child. This hope expired when I learned, at the time Jim's parents took our infant son, that Jim was dead.

I tried to forget this ugly and tragic episode; and since my emotions had not become deeply involved, I succeeded to a certain extent. Some years later I married a fine, upright man and came here to live. Remembering my own mistakes, I brought up my daughter with a strict sense of right and wrong and a high moral code. Betty (my daughter) and I have been very close. In fact, she follows my advice and example with an earnestness that is almost embarrassing at times. Through a surprising and unforeseen combination of circumstances, Betty met my son (young Jim) and they were well on the way to falling in love before I realized his identity. I know that Jim, who has grown into a charming person and competent naval officer, is thinking of marrying Betty before he is sent out of this country; and Betty's rapture at the thought is obvious. I am sure they would not take any hasty steps without consulting my husband and me.

How can I handle the situation? My husband knows only vaguely of my earlier entanglement; he never wished to know anything definite about it. I have tentatively tried to bring up the subject recently, but he is offended at the thought. He approves of young Jim and sympathizes with Betty's attachment to him. To tell Betty the truth would be to shatter all her ideals and perhaps turn her against me, as well as break her heart. It seems true that, "The sins of the fathers are visited on their children." My thoughts seem to mill around in circles. Can you see any way to help me? Is there no way out, except to lose the love and trust of those dear to me? Please give me your opinion. E. W. P.

Prayerful Reflection Is Necessary Here

DEAR E. W. P.: Here, in your brief, restrained and sketchy report of a problem to be solved, you confront me with a situation fraught with so much dynamite for the persons immediately concerned, that hardly any disinterested individual with a sober cognition of the vasty implications latently involved would care,—or perhaps I should say dare,—to assume the responsibility of propounding, with assurance, a given "way out." However, since you have seen fit to turn to me for a ray of clarification, I feel a serious obligation to try to help;—and so, with a prayer for right guidance, here goes.

One thing is certain and obvious,—a point that need hardly be stressed. Jim's plan to marry Betty, and her rapturous anticipation in that regard, must be called off. And the greatest kindness you can do them is to take immediate, immutable action in that regard, before their natural affinity for each other (which bespeaks their unerring mutual recognition of abiding kinship), has become too deeply confirmed in the highly emotional pattern of romantic ardor. The crucial question, of course, is how best to do this,—best in the sense of inflicting the least lasting melancholy upon the hearts of all concerned.

Bring Truth to Bear; Nothing Else Will Do

Weighing that question,—which, on first reflection, may appear to permit of no humanly acceptable answer,—I have come to the conclusion that the only hope of meeting the situation in a manner that will give most ease to the hearts of all concerned, consists in bringing truth to bear. But how much truth,—conveyed to whom? As between Jim and Betty, if a choice were to be made, which could best bear the truth? On first thought, it might be argued that Jim's lifelong stranger status, with regard to you, would insulate him against shattering shock, if confronted with the story of your youthful transgression; and that he could most gracefully (and with least complicated pain of heart) fade out of the picture, with plausible (and mercifully intended) justification to Betty,—who, though she might be transiently heartbroken by his supposed fickleness, would thus be spared a perhaps more disturbing "disillusionment" with regard to her mother, and could be expected in time to make a normal recovery from romantic disappointment and later happily marry an eligible man.

On the other hand, however, you ARE his mother (the closest physical relationship in nature);—and once that tie was disclosed, his very instinct, if not his sentiments and emotions, would irresistibly impel his attention and interest toward you. And the more so, of course, in the special circumstances,—in view of his spontaneous, tender and true (and fundamentally brotherly) love of Betty, whose mother you also are; and in view of the fact that a man's filial attachments tend to assume for him a profounder appeal and significance when he is going forth to battle, perhaps to die. Furthermore, Jim's ability to "take it" without demoralizing psychological consequences to himself would be lessened, by virtue of the fact that, just after facing the truth as a one-sided burden for him to bear (for Betty's sake), he would be going away to grapple with unpredictable, unendingly severe new adjustments to an environment of life-and-death struggle, after having forlornly pledged himself to sever, finally and forever (and on a deserter basis), all contact with Betty whom he consciously loves; and with you, his just-discovered real mother, whose image would thereafter doubly haunt him,—as the mother he didn't get to know and as his intrinsic link with Betty. It is doubtful that a man of average sensibilities could escape cracking up, in character and/or mind, if he went into the battle arena with his heart and soul so harried. And this is merely to scratch the surface of potential effects upon Jim,—which depend so much upon native temperament, childhood environment, etc.,—if he were to be made key figure in the solution of the drama.

But How Much Truth? Conveyed to Whom?

To me it seems, then, that as between Jim and Betty,—if a choice were to be made,—that Betty might more safely be made the key figure in action designed to bring the situation under proper social control. Though the truth about Jim's relationship to her and to you may, on first hearing,—and as you most dread,—disturb her profoundly, in the sense of seeming to amount to a flat (or lie-giving) contradiction to your conscientious policy of training her "with a strict sense of right and wrong and a high moral code," it is reasonable to hope that in time, and when fully digested, it might be appraised by her with true understanding, as constituting proof that you knew, with regenerate wisdom, whereof you spoke in counseling her to the loftiest behavior; and that you had been fully sincere in relation to her, in trying as her mentor to set her the highest (and safest) example of conduct. Since Betty would have the immeasurable psychological support of continuing association with devoted parents, to see her through the period of adjustment to the truth,—plus opportunity, if need be, for thorough instruction from skilled psychologists, in achieving a good adjustment,—I feel, to repeat, that she might be better able to confidentially share your secret than Jim would be, if a choice between them were to be made.

But this tentative conclusion doesn't bring us out of the woods, by any means. The fact of Betty's superlative, and basically valid, attachment to Jim remains. How could she break his heart, perhaps ruin his faith in womankind, by abruptly jilting him without explicable cause?—and want to live, after having dealt that (so far as he knew) treacherous and dastardly stroke? The answer is,—I don't think she could. So I come to the further conclusion that the truth must be shared with Betty and Jim,—as the least harmful way of doing what must be done. It seems to me the only means of decently reconciling them to the fact that they CANNOT marry. And it seems most merciful, since it poses the implied alternative of a continuing affectional relationship on a brother-sister basis, and also constitutes explanation of why they were spontaneously attracted to each other from the first. Furthermore, it leaves the latchstring of your heart out to Jim,—if he should care to improve the blood tie.

Don't Degrade Past, With Craven Apology

Having said so much,—which already taxes the space at my command,—I realize that much ground remains to be covered, in process of organizing your plan. I shall touch on such major points in brief. 1. Does your husband come into the picture and when? Owing to his uncomprehending advocacy of Jim's wish to marry Betty, he does,—and I should say, first of all. 2. Does he enter into the conference with Betty and Jim? Not necessarily. That is for you and him to decide. After all, it will be your past under discussion,—not his. 3. Should the truth be imparted, surprise-fashion, to Jim and Betty at a joint conference? My thought would be to tell Betty first, in confidential session between you two; and later, for you to tell Jim exactly the story you have told Betty, with Betty present if she so desires. 4. If you feel you cannot support this confessional ordeal without poised and wise adult backing, turn to a psychiatrist with the whole problem, and let him preside over the truth-giving sessions. 5. Above all, have faith in the fundamental decency, intelligence and spiritual strength of Jim and Betty,—i. e., in their intrinsic ability to assimilate and sanely adjust to the startling facts you have to tell. And say what you have to say with dignity and restraint, thus giving them a chance to react on an heroic level of feeling. Don't make them ashamed, for themselves and for you,—nor drag the story of Jim's origin down to the unnecessarily low level of sordid narrative,—by cowering before them in craven apology. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Your Baby and Mine

By Myrtle Meyer Eldred

Wherever I go people always talk to me about their children and so it was quite natural, as I sat having my hair "done," that the operator should tell me about his smart 3-year-old daughter.

He said that as she sat on his lap being read to after dinner she suddenly turned and asked him, "Where was I before I was your little girl?"

"I didn't know what to say to her," he related. "Her mother knows more about those things than I do. I told her we got her at the hospital, but to ask her mother. When she ran and asked her mother, my wife came in and looked at me as if she thought I had put her up to asking her. But honest I didn't."

"Why did you tell her you didn't know about those things?" I was curious to know. "What things don't you know about? Don't you know where babies come from?"

He looked abashed. "Why, sure. But she's so young to talk to about that."

"But she isn't too young to ask questions and when she does, she is entitled to a truthful answer. She is too young for you to try to make understandable the whole complicated subject of sex. But all she wanted to know was where she was before she as born. And you had the golden opportunity to tell her and to plant the first seed of honest education. I'm afraid you muffed that one."

This same attitude is so typical of men who, because of their own miseducation in sex, are inclined to run like ostriches and bury their heads the moment the ugly word crops up. Yet it's so futile to imagine that intelligent children, whose questions arise from their own thinking, can be put off with, "I got you at the hospital," or "God sent you to us."

Any child will get a very queer idea of a hospital that gladly gives away babies to some parents and refuses them to others, as she will of a beneficent and all-wise God who capriciously denies the wishes of many a childless parent and lavishes babies on families obviously unable to care for or feed them.

The truth is so much simpler and can be added to indefinitely without getting one in hot water. In fact, evasions are no more suited to the young child than the plain facts, since one cannot really make them understandable.

Be casual about your answers, but grab the opportunities when they arise and answer an honest question honestly and factually, not fancifully.

My leaflet on "Answering the Child's Questions About Babies" offers sensible suggestions for the parents' guidance. Be sure your request is accompanied by a 3c stamped self-addressed envelope, and send it to Myrtle Meyer Eldred, in care of "Your Baby and Mine" Dept. of this newspaper.

Better and Fewer Oysters

With the opening of the oyster season this month, households can expect bigger and better oysters—but fewer of them—says Office of the Coordinator of Fisheries. They'll be fewer because the armed services will consume about 40,000 gallons a week. They'll be larger and fatter because the New England beds have now entirely recovered from the effects of the 1938 hurricane.

Your Figure, Madame!

By Ida Jean Kain

If you are over 18 and under 60, you have to take daily exercise—or else lose your figure.

There is nothing stuffy about a daily dozen. Only the people who never take any exercise have that idea.

Start with the exercise for the abdominal muscles because the tone of these muscles has such a far-reaching effect on your health. Probably the most effective exercise of this kind is the following:

Position: Lying flat on your back on the floor, legs stretched down and arms up on floor above the head, and feet anchored under a chest of drawers or the foot of the bed.

Movement: Come up to sitting position, stretch through the midriff, and bend over to touch ankles. Lie back slowly. Repeat three times for a starter and add one time each day until you are up to 15.

Position: Stand erect with arms stretched overhead.

Movement: Bend acutely sideward. Hold the midriff stretch and center the bend precisely at the waist. Don't let the hips bow out at the side. Come back to starting position and bend to other side. Continue for 10 counts.

A good general exercise for the arms and shoulders is the Swedish "cross-to-fly."

For the Woman Overseas

Hair may be a woman's crowning glory, but to the woman overseas it's more apt to be the theme song for bitter and unending complaint. That's why your gift to the woman in uniform will be prized above all others if you'll include some hair grooming helps like:

A home permanent-waving set. You can get a set (been on the market for a long time and is tried and tested), complete with curlers, curling lotion, and special shampoo, for about $1. Very simple to use, completely packaged and easy to send, and manna from heaven for frazzled-hair WACS and nurses overseas.

Wave sets and hair rinses: You can get both of these in powdered form which make very tiny parcels but upon dilution with water make gallons of either.

Hair-grooming pads: Uniform caps weren't made to top scraggly locks. Women in uniform are especially grateful for those little hair-lacquer pads, about a hundred in a jar for around $1.

Soap ! ! !

"Send me soap." That's the big plea, whether male or female! We found some deliciously scented soap in a set of three sturdy-sized bars for about $1.50. They're "French-milled," which is another way of saying long-lasting. You can get them in a variety of subtle scents.

Washing underwear, hose, gloves, sweaters can cease to be a tedious and frustrating task for the ladies overseas, if you'll make a point of including concentrated soap powder that dissolves dirt with little elbow grease on the part of the laundress. They come either in little measured packages (40 for $1) or loose with a scoop-measure (100 washings for about $2).

Perfumes and Colognes

Living in tailored uniforms and harsh khaki has only intensified the WAC or the Army nurse's desire for fine essences. They don't want exotic, siren-types. They want clean, fresh-smelling fragrances. There are three "flavors" put out by one cosmetic house which we put at the top of our own list—"white lilac," "tapestry" and one called "yram" (we're not sure why, but one sniff of it and you don't need to ask questions). A dram and a quarter of any one of these is around $2.50.

Another good one is called "whirlwind"—you can get this for about $1 a dram. Kind of hard to describe perfumes, but this one reminded us of days like these—cool and hard sunlight.

We know of a wonderful cream Cologne that comes in a plastic container. Fine answer to the ban on heavy bottles for overseas shipping. This one is about $1.50.

Powders and Potions

This little powder book you could stick in a letter—it's that small. Looks like a tiny notebook; with leaves made of fine rice paper, impregnated with powder. You just rub a leaf on your face and throw it away. "Papier poudre," it's called. Comes in 25 and 50-cent sizes.

Most women overseas have a preference for those cake make-ups. They're easy to carry, easy to use, and last indefinitely. There are several brands of these all very good. We especially like one that is about $1.

She wants her cleansing creams, too, but beware of porcelain jars. We know of an excellent one that's available in tubes. Another good idea are those saturated pads, which we mentioned before, that clean the face in a hurry. You can get a jar of a hundred of these for around $1.

Another good thought is one of those terry cloth powder mitts. You can get one of these, nicely packaged, with a powder refill for about $1. (Get a container of her favorite bath powder and send it along with the mitt).

A good hand cream is something she can't get enough of. We know of a swell one in a generous-sized tube for about $1.

A wind and weather lotion (we couldn't find any packaged unbreakable containers) is another thing they've asked for. We can tell you of a good all-purpose lotion for about $1.

Kits:

One of the neatest kits we've seen, which would certainly delight the heart of any woman overseas, is made of a water-repellent fabric that contains all a woman needs to keep her face in order. It's specially put out by one of the better-known cosmetic houses and contains pace powder, cologne, rouge, lipstick, skin lotion, cleansing cream, foundation cream. It's about $5.

Remember her feminine needs, measure them by the postmaster's regulations for overseas packages, and it'll add up to a Happy Christmas for her.

Overseas Christmas Presents

Wrapping, Mailing Overseas Gifts

Remember the deadline mailing dates for Christmas presents going overseas. For the Army, September 15 to October 15. For the Navy, September 15 to November 1. Army bans requiring a request from the addressee have been lifted for the above mailing period only. Now here's what you should know about packaging.

The size of all packages is restricted to 5 pounds in weight or 15 inches in length or 36 inches in length and girth combined.

Use either metal, wooden, solid fiberboard, double-faced corrugated fiberboard, or strongly, fully telescoping cardboard boxes.

Use a double layer of heavy wrapping paper. Tie with a strong twine or heavy cord in such a manner as to permit ready inspection by the censors.

Don't expect the censor to have time to retie rosettes of red ribbon, or to carefully replace tissue paper. As far as wrappings go, certainly this should be a tough, practical Christmas—use heavy, strong brown paper and skip the pretty but fragile stuff. Save your time, your money, and the censor's time and temper.

Allow at least a pound of the 5 pounds' limit for the weight of wrappings.

The contents of combination packages should be packed tightly. Otherwise they'll break in transit.

Addressing: For soldiers write name, rank, Army serial number, branch of service, organization, APO number, and postoffice through which it is to be routed. For sailors, give the name, rank, rating, the naval unit to which he is assigned, and the name of the ship and fleet postoffice through which it passes. All of this is important. Remember that just the simple transposition of numbers may result in your package going to Australia instead of London!

Stress the complete name on each package. (Guess how many Bill Joneses may be in one camp!) Include your own name and address. Mark each parcel "Christmas Parcel." "Merry Christmas," etc., may be written on the parcel, but in such a manner as not to interfere with the address. Stickers resembling postage stamps are not permissible.

For the Man Overseas

Is it something he really needs? Will it last him a while? Is it sturdily packaged (i. e. non-breakable like cardboard, wooden or tubed)? Those are the questions we kept in mind on this second shopping trip for men's toiletries. And we found the answers—complete answers as follows:

Shaving Stuff:

Even though men have been photographed with jungle growths on their faces from South Sea areas, these are exceptions. Shaving equipment is in constant demand. We found three good shaving sets which answered all our questions:

(1) A compact set for about $1.50 with a generous tube of shaving cream, a bar of lanolin soap, a container of talcum powder, and five razor blades.

(2) A set with talcum powder and shaving stick handsomely done up in natural wood containers. Fine, woodsy-smelling stuff. This pair is about $1.50.

(3) A set made up of a large tube of brushless shave cream (or the lathering kind) and a cardboard container of talcum. For the man who likes spicy-smelling toiletries, this is it—about $1.

You can get a big bundle of razor-blades (double-edged)—72 for about $1—nicely packaged and ready to send.

We know where you can get genuine badger brushes from under $5 up to $15. Might be a good idea to include one of these in his gift package.

Soaps:

From Iceland to the Equator, soap is the request that's been underscored again and again. They want soap, lots of soap. Be sure to get a long-lasting soap, a hard soap. You can get a box of four enormous cakes, pine-scented, which will last him for months—about $1.

Doing their own underwear, socks, etc., is no novelty for our men overseas. That's why we recommend this concentrated soap powder for males as well as females. It's swell stuff, lathers quickly, and takes out dirt in no time flat. You can get it in several sizes. (See details under "Toiletries for Women Overseas.")

Foot Care:

Here's another thing, men and women across the ways, ask for repeatedly: antiseptic foot powders. There are several good ones. One of the best sells at most drug counters for around 30 cents. You can also get a kit (for about a $1), which contains a big can of the foot powder, medicated soap, and foot balm.

Another very good foot preparation is available in compact stick form—wonderfully soothing and very effective antiseptically speaking—for about $1.

Kits:

There are all manner of kits around. One of the ones he likes best is the "apron type" which he can tie around his middle while using. It rolls up into a neat package. We found one, crammed with(and six empty compartments to fill in himself) things like dental cream, comb, toothbrush, shaving cream, mirror, razor blades and talcum. About $4.

Another good idea is the small "duffle bag" type. If you love him very much why not get one of these in a sturdy but soft leather and fill it with preparations that you know he likes We found a topgrain cowhide one for under $5.

Extra Thoughts:

We know where you can get a club-handled, nylon-bristled hair brush for about $5.

What about some good sunburn lotion for the man in hot places? One of the best of its kind comes in sizes from about 30 cents up to 80 cents.

For further information, please call NAtional 4200, Extension 324, between 9 a. m. and 5 p. m.

SHOP AND RUN

Calling Overseas Christmas Shoppers

There may be a 5-pound limit on the Christmas parcel you send overseas, but there's no limit on the amount of Christmas cheer you can send.

Select the items they've asked for, wrap 'em as gayly as you please, inclose a few snapshots and an extra special letter. That's sending a good slice of an American Christmas!

They Want Tobacco Pouches

And we've found one we're sure he'll like. It's made of brown calfskin, with a waterproof lining and, best of all, it folds up to take a minimum of space. $3.75.

They Want Games——

We've found individual games that are light on your purse and light in his knapsack. You can get checkers, flinch, dice, chess, gin rummy in individual sets or a handsome four-in-one set that comes in a leather box for $12.

They Want Shower Slippers

We've found good ones. They're water repellent, light but sturdy, easy to get into and are fine for either barracks or showers. The soles are made of fabric, heavy enough to keep out either cold or heat. They come in all sizes, navy and tan, in a heavy cardboard box ready for mailing. $1.69.

They Want Money Belts

So here are the best ones we found. One is made of a water-repellent tackle twill and has a zipper and three compartments.

The Gentler Sex

By Malvina Lindsay

In Defense Of 'Lowbrows'

The habit of American youth to cultivate the adolescent attitude has been recently criticized in this column as presenting a barrier to national maturity and progress. Now comes a defender and explainer of that attitude—the wife of a young man belonging to the much criticized generation between 25 and 40. The clinging to adolescence has been caused, she says, by the disillusionment of youth by the older generation and by the type of education that followed the last World War. Now that we may soon be going into another post-war period her viewpoint is particularly interesting.

Identifying her generation as the "forerunner of the zoot suiters" she terms its attitude "part of a profound disillusionment about the older generation—which trend is accented in the actions of the zoot suiters. It's an attitude that "they" made such a mess of things we don't want to resemble them in the least," she explains. Hence the complete disowning of what has gone before including the 'culture' and 'social decorum' and emphasis on grammar, all of which smacked of the leisure and indifference to the things that really mattered and which led to the holocaust of which our generation is taking the brunt.

"I wonder if I can make you understand," she writes, "how sure we were that there never would be another World War. We were taught that the nations were drawn in by a sort of irrisistible combination of events—even the Kaiser wasn't responsible for them—but that it never would happen again now that our eyes were open and we were really civilized. You see, the older generation was completely blameless and promised to accomplish the impossible by avoiding responsibility. Now we're stuck with their mistakes. Do you blame us for being disrespectful?

"It's too bad that the correspondent who complained of the language of young men didn't understand the terms 'in the groove' and 'what's cookin.' You see, it's part of the gallant humor with which this generation is meeting its disheartening future.

"The same writer also said, 'must it be left to the newspapers to educate youth to the thrill of just being alive?' Now that's the cheerful thing about the prospect. She needn't worry. That a peculiar thing about being young (and healthy) no matter what you appear to be you can't help but be thrilled at being alive. It even triumphs over all the reasons for not being alive, such as being drafted before you've even had a chance to figure out what it's all about.

"I come from a well educated family (I think) and had years of fine art training, but I still don't believe in pursuing culture for culture's sake. I accept what seems to apply to things as I know them, but so much of it is excess baggage in facing the realities that are being bared now. Particularly do I abhor the grammar snob. What does it matter how a person says the truth so long as it's true? It's the lies that should be resented. It's all very well to have beautiful icing on your cake—if the cake isn't moldy inside."

This defender of youth signs herself "Lowbrow" — obviously as a gallant gesture. And that serves to recall that the original discussion in this column, before it got off on the tangent of the adolescent-minded was concerned with the national tendency to make a cult of ignorance, a weakness certainly not of any one generation. Also it seems doubtful whether we can simplify the blame for the present "mess" of the world by laying it at the door of the adults of the 1920's. But insofar as they failed, insofar as they are guilty of the charges made against them by the youth of today, it was largely because they resisted change, enlightenment and a growing up to their responsibilities. That attitude is based on self-satisfied ignorance, an attitude that bedevils every generation. Because we need so desperately to avoid it in the crucial testing period ahead, it is necessary that we combat it now, even in the so-called trifles of life, such as prideful snobbery in being "lowbrow."

MARTHA ELLYN'S

Platter Chatter

Pass the gravy, save the butter and make a butterscotch pie. Well-made gravy with no lumps, to use on bread and potatoes will make diners forget they don't have butter to spread thick and far.

Martha Ellyn

When the small amount of two tablespoons of butter is all that is needed to make such an appealing dessert as butterscotch pie, you won't be guilty of using butter except in the most judicious way.

But we must consider more than the dessert. What to have for the pivotal dish. Country fried pork steak with cream gravy can be the dish. This dish makes splendid gravy because the good-flavored brown particles left in the frying pan can be blended into the gravy. Here is a suggested menu:

DINNER MENU

Country Fried Pork Steak
Mashed Potatoes Gravy
Tossed Vegetable Salad
Fried Green Tomatoes
Enriched White Bread
Butterscotch Pie Coffee

Have the butcher cut you 4 pork shoulder steaks, ½-inch thick. This will be about 1½ pounds of meat. Then proceed as follows:

COUNTRY FRIED PORK STEAK

Dip the steaks in flour, melt ½ tablespoon fat in frying pan, heat and add steaks. Brown slowly and thoroughly on both sides, season, then turn fire very low and continue cooking for 12 to 15 minutes. Remove meat to hot plate. Pour off all but ¼ cup fat, add 3 tablespoons flour and stir until smooth, then add 2 cups milk gradually, stirring vigorously until all the good flavored particles left by the steak are blended into the gravy. Season to taste. Serves 4.

Now for the pie. In spite of rationing and shortages, it is not difficult to find the ingredients for making the following pie:

BUTTERSCOTCH PIE

Combine ¼ cup sugar, ½ cup cornstarch and ½ teaspoon salt. Add 1 cup maple-flavored sirup gradually, stirring until smooth. Add the mixture to 1½ cups scalded milk, and cook in top of double boiler until mixture thickens, stirring constantly; then continue cooking 10 minutes, stirring occasionally. Pour a small amount of syrup mixture over two slightly beaten egg yolks, stirring vigorously; return to double boiler and cook 3 minutes longer, stirring constantly. Remove from boiling water; add 2 tablespoons butter and 1 teaspoon vanilla. Cool. Turn a baked 9-inch pie shell. Beat 2 egg whites until foamy throughout; add 4 tablespoons sugar, 2 tablespoons at a time, beating after each addition until sugar is blended. Then continue beating until mixture will stand in peaks. Pile lightly on filling. Bake in moderate oven (350 degrees F.) 15 minutes, or until delicately browned.

The butter supply is one thing that today's cook watches with an eagle eye. Even to make a delicious dessert like the butterscotch pie pictured here won't leave the butter supply at low ebb. The filling requires but two tablespoons butter. And the sprinkling of crushed ready-to-eat cereal with meringue border gives a new angle to a pie's topping

Clean Tile Floors

Tiled bathroom floors can be kept immaculate by regular scrubbing. Use a scrub brush dipped into warm soap lather. Rinse with a cloth wrung out of clear water, and wipe with a dry cloth. Avoid stepping on the clean surface until it is thoroughly dry. Be sure to scrub around the base of all fixtures.

Ah! Split Pea Timbales with White Wine Sauce

POINT-THRIFTY RECIPE

To 2 cups pureed cooked green split peas add 4 beaten eggs, ½ cup Sauterne, 1½ tsps. salt, pepper, cayenne, and bit of grated onion. Pour in greased custard cups, set in pan of boiling water ½" deep. Bake at 350° until firm (30-40 min.). Serve with Sauterne Sauce: Heat 3 tbsps. margarine with 3 tbsps. flour; stir in 1 cup water. Add 2 bouillon cubes, 2 tsps. paprika; simmer 5 min. Add ¾ cup Sauterne. Serves 6.

And glasses of white wine!

● Try Split Pea Timbales with this tempting sauce. And serve at table moderate glasses of the same golden Sauterne wine that's in the sauce. You'll find excellent California Sauternes at dealers' now. Wine Advisory Board, San Francisco.

News of the Women's Clubs

By Genevieve Reynolds

Now that Casey Jones has gone to war, thousands of Mrs. Joneses have donned overalls, picked up a lunch box and gone into railroading. Moreover, they are doing jobs that would make the old Caseys envious. So declared Carlton J. Corliss, manager, Public Section, Association of American Railroads,

GENEVIEVE REYNOLDS

Guest speaker at the Soroptimist Club of Washington luncheon meeting yesterday, he said that women could be found oiling and swabbing down giant locomotives, cleaning and vacuuming cars, handling baggage, manning information booths, ticket offices and operating station trucks. "As a matter of fact, you will find women today performing such man-sized jobs as steam-hammer operators, crossing flagmen, signal tower operators and drawbridge tenders," he explained. "Also, you will find women in overalls working in round houses, in railroad shops and yards."

However, he warned that such manual labor jobs were the exception. At least two-thirds of all the women in railway services are performing office work, and the number of such women employes probably has increased more than the number of women in heavy, manual work.

There are women railroad presidents. On one railroad the chairman of the board is a woman. There are women corporation secretaries. Recently an Eastern railway appointed a woman accountant. Another railroad system employs them in such important positions as purchasing agents, superintendents of dining car service and travel bureau managers. Still another large railroad has given the woman the unique position of engineer of service. Her principal duties are to study ways to increase the comforts of passengers, particularly women travelers, according to Mr. Corliss.

For some time railroads that operate hospitals have employed women as superintendents, nurses, physical therapy technicians, dietitians, laboratory technicians. Newest field created for women in railway services is that of train hostesses and stewardesses on streamlined trains. "And from the number of applications received, these are by far the most popular jobs," said Mr. Corliss, who predicted a postwar expansion of streamliners and women hostesses.

In 1941 approximately 55,000 women were employed by railroads, according to a survey made by the Railroad Retirement Board. Since then the number has jumped 100 per cent. Today Mr. Corliss estimates the number in railroad service around 125,000, with two-thirds working as secretaries, stenographers, typists, office machine operators, telegraph and switchboard operators.

Mr. Corliss recalled the fact that the first woman railroad employe known was a scrubwoman, Susan Morningstar, employed by the Baltimore & Ohio in 1855. But the first woman to hold a white-collar job was Mary William Mellor, who entered in 1875 as a telegraph operator.

Besides citing the work now being done by women in railroading, the speaker told how the railroads are meeting wartime transportation emergencies.

Miss Mildred Clum presided and Miss McKenna introduced the speaker.

Church Women Meet

Mme. Wei, wife of the Chinese Ambassador, pulled herself out of a sickbed yesterday to keep an engagement of long standing. Many months before she had invited the missionary committee of the Washington Council of Church Women to hold its fellowship tea at the embassy. So, despite her illness, the gracious chatelaine of the embassy was here and there welcoming the guests, receiving the church women or urging them to have another delicacy.

Receiving with Mme. Wei were Mrs. Joy Elmer Morgan, president of the Washington Council of Church Women; Miss Etta Mai Russell, executive secretary; Mrs. Theodore O. Wedel and Mrs. Irving W. Ketchum, chairman of the department.

Pouring tea were Mrs. Wilber La Roe, Mrs. Gould Wickey, Mrs. Howard Stone Anderson, Mrs. Charles G. Lueck, Mrs. S. W. Stewart, Mrs. T. G. Carr and Mrs. T. W. Marshall.

Those invited were the denomination chairmen of missionary education for the District of Columbia, which numbered about 30.

Bits of This and That . . .

Dr. Raphael Lemkin, distinguished Polish jurist, economist, authority on international law, author and traveler, will tell of his experiences in World War I and II at the dinner meeting tonight at the Woman's National Democratic Club. Formerly with the Universities of Warsaw and Stockholm, Dr. Lemkin now is a member of the faculty of Duke University on duration loan to the Board of Economic Warfare. He has served on various committees of experts for the League of Nations . . . Washington Chapter, Greensboro College Alumnae Association, will hold its first fall meeting Sunday afternoon, 3 to 5 o'clock, at the home of Miss M. Elizabeth Winn, 3536 13th st. nw. . . . Zeta Club of Washington digressed from the international and local civic matters at its luncheon yesterday to learn a little about three of its past service members. Miss Mary W. Sigman gave the biographies of Miss Estelle Foster, Miss Caroline Longfellow and Mrs. Emily Dickinson.

War Bond Salesmen

Manning war bond booths at the "Back the Attack" Army Show takes 135 recruits every day, no small job when figured out in terms of three-hour shifts from 12 noon until 10 p. m. seven days a week.

Responsibility for the smooth running of these booths, where thousands of Washingtonians are spending tens of thousands of dollars on third war loan bonds, is in the hands of Mrs. Edgar M. McPeak and her vice chairman, Mrs. Charles Leigh Stevens. However, Mrs. McPeak takes no credit for the precision with which her booths are manned; instead she gives it to her captains.

The women's division of the War Finance Committee, comprised of 66 women's business and professional groups and clubs, members of which are working under the direction of Mrs. Howard S. Leroy, chairman of the clubs, not only man the "Back the Attack" booths but four others as well.

Mrs. McPeak's captains are Mrs. J. A. Battle, who keeps recruits on the job in the War Bond booth at Garfinckel's; Mrs. L. P. Rawley, who runs the one at the Union Station without a hitch in schedule; Mrs. G. B. Hartman, who runs the DAR booths; Mrs. D. N. Eisendrath, who is key woman for the Housekeepers Alliance; Miss Ruth Nicholson of the Internal Revenue group, who keeps the booth in full swing down at the Internal Revenue Building, and Mrs. Marie Werner, who has charge of the Business and Professional Women's bond selling.

About Washington . . .

WHEN Brooklyn Representative Eugene J. Keogh took the floor on the opening day of Congress for his impassioned speech, "Trees Do Grow In Brooklyn," he caused some confusion in the House press gallery. In the midst of a seemingly endless flow of requests that vacation-time speeches be included in the Congressional Record, Keogh relieved the tedium by leaping to his feet, asking "unanimous consent to address the House for one minute."

He began: "Mr. Speaker, trees do grow in Brooklyn; alianthus, yes, but also many fine strong and sturdy trees. . . ."

Wearied press reporters, as well as virtually every member of Congress listening at the time, raised their brows in bewilderment.

. . . "But what is more important is the fact that in Brooklyn there are three million fine loyal Americans, and I am impelled today respectfully to disagree with the distinguished authoress and tell her and you that those Americans have not abandoned, and will not abandon, hope," Keogh went on.

Reporters buzzed among themselves. What on earth was he talking about? Was he going to wind up with "Only God can make a tree" . . . and wasn't that written by a man, not an authoress? By the time Keogh had drawn his speech to a close with the thought that "peace will again come to Brooklyn and its trees will still grow," a few reporters, at least, had figured out what he had on his mind.

He was denouncing the stern portrayal of Brooklyn in Betty Smith's best seller. "A Tree Grows In Brooklyn." . . . Yesterday afternoon, a local book store reported having received around 20 calls for the novel, one request being made for "some book about the trees in Brooklyn."

REPRESENTATIVE Margaret Chase Smith of Maine, one of the most attractive and unassuming members of Congress, invariably is surprised when she gets any marked attention. Why, I don't know . . . because she gets it all the time. But the other day when she walked across the street from the House Office Building to the Capitol, she noted that a flock of news photographers were at her heel. She turned, smiled; asked one: "Is there some celebrity expected on the Hill today?" . . . "Several—and you're one of them," was the reply. "We want your picture, but you're the fastest walking celebrity we ever saw!"

FROM NEW ORLEANS comes word that Lyle Saxon, the Louisiana boy who made his fascinating home town even more so with his famous "Fabulous New Orleans," has named his new book, "Gumbo-Ya-Ya." That's the tome he finished while in Washington last winter, and no matter what you think, the title is not the name of a Creole dish, nor a breakdown dance step.

The book, by the way, is an uncensored collection of Louisiana superstition, gossip and folklore, and the title couldn't be more suitable. "Make no mistake," Saxon writes, "your whole future, as far as New Orleans Creoles are concerned, depends on gumbo-ya-ya. The venerable ladies meet in the afternoon in some parlor, amidst furniture and bric-a-brac that would drive a decorator mad and a collector into ecstasy. They sip coffee and talk. This is gumbo-ya-ya."

Whatever it is, the book will be widely read in Washington, for witty Lyle Saxon was one of our town's most popular bachelors back in the days when he headed the WPA Writers' Project here.

BACK IN WASHINGTON after a summer in Denver, Prince and Princess Pignatelli bring word that the Colorado capital is one American city in which one can forget the war—almost. A "business as usual" attitude prevails, the prince said, and during the whole time he and his wife were there "everybody seemed to have all the meat he wanted, all the gasoline he needed, all the comfort possible."

News of Italy's collapse hastened the Pignatellis' return to Washington. The prince is anxiously awaiting news of his parents, who live in Florence, and who have not communicated with him for several months. Shortly before the war, he visited them and then sailed for America with hopes of taking out his citizenship papers shortly after he arrived. Outbreak of war delayed his plans, "But just as soon as it's all over, I'm going to apply," he said. Incidentally, he's half Italian, half Russian.

Mention of one prince reminds me of another . . . who became a U. S. citizen here several years ago, but still has a legal right to be called "Prince." He's Prince Ourusoff, better known as Leonid Ourusoff. At a party the other afternoon he was telling a small group that Prince became one of his first names at the time he dropped it as a title. Seems he thought it would simplify matters considerably; but there was enough official objection to such an arrangement that the situation had to be thrashed out at the State Department. Finally, he was allowed to keep Prince as part of his name . . . after the lawyer who argued his case pointed out it was perfectly proper for a man to be named "Prince," because, as the lawyer said, "I have a dog called 'Duke' and if a dog can have a title as a name, certainly a man can call himself 'Prince' if he wants to!"

Chilean Foreign Minister to Be Feted

Joaquin Fernandez, Foreign Minister of Chile, will arrive in Miami, Fla., this afternoon and will take a plane from there for Washington. He is due in the Capital tomorrow afternoon at 4 o'clock and will go direct to Blair House, where he will be a guest during his stay here.

The distinguished visitor will be guest of honor at a dinner to be given by Secretary of State Cordell Hull tomorrow evening at the Carlton Hotel. On Saturday he will hold a press conference at Blair House at 11 o'clock, to be followed by a visit to Vice President Wallace at the Capitol at noon. A luncheon at the Pan American Union will be given in his honor at 1 o'clock.

There will be a gala reception at the Pan American Union Saturday evening, at which the Chilean Ambassador and Senora de Michels will be hosts, and on Sunday Senor Fernandez will lunch at Blair House. Sunday evening the Assistant Secretary of State and Mrs. Adolf A. Berle, jr., will entertain at dinner for the Chilean official, and on Monday evening the Chilean Ambassador and Senora de Michels will again be hosts.

What does the "Erlebacher manner" mean to you in wartime?

To us the Erlebacher manner has always meant a traditional way of doing business; the maintaining of enduring Quality; of a Service that serves warmly in a friendly fashion.

To you, in wartime, the Erlebacher manner is still these things: Quality that, in changing times, shall be maintained at its enduring best. Service that, in a hurried world, still aims to serve you warmly, in a friendly fashion.

Lady Dill, Returned from London, Plans Speaking Tour Under Red Cross Auspices

Lady Dill, wife of Field Marshal Sir John Dill, chief of joint chiefs of staff in Washington, engages an American soldier in a game of checkers at the American Red Cross Rainbow Corner in London. Her partner is Staff Sergt. Edwin H. Starr of Malden, Mass. Lady Dill, upon her return to America, will lecture to parents of American soldiers on the work of the Red Cross in the ETO

A welcome message will soon be carried to the families of American soldiers, sailors, marines and air men by an English ambassadress of Anglo-American good will, Lady Dill. Wife of Field Marshal Sir John Dill, formerly chief of the imperial general staff and now chief of joint staff in Washington, Lady Dill has engaged in war work, with the same courage and energy as her husband, since the beginning of the war. At present attached to the American Red Cross, she will lecture throughout the country to tell the story of what this organization is doing for the enlisted men in the European theater of operations.

Just returned to Washington from an extensive tour in Great Britain, where she observed Red Cross operations there, Lady Dill will speak at many Red Cross chapter meetings. "It has been heartening to observe first-hand overseas the results of the diligent labors of chapter volunteers," said Lady Dill.

During the past weeks, in many American Red Cross clubs throughout Britain, a quiet, unassuming but charming woman, dressed in the simple Red Cross overall, was seen in all departments, asking questions of GI's and staff, interviewing club directors and finding out—for the benefit of fathers and mothers at home in America—how the morale of the US armed forces on leave is being strengthened and maintained.

"I am amazed at the scope of the work these Red Cross clubs are doing," said Lady Dill. "I expect to be asked by the soldiers' parents many domestic questions such as, What are their recreations, What food do they get, Are they supplied with comfortable beds, Do they have dances, games and so on. All of these I am now in a position to answer with some authority and, I am glad to say, every such question can be given the wanted answer."

Lady Dill was impressed with the quality of the food served to the men at 1 shilling each for luncheon or dinner. "I'm sure that nowhere else in Britain could a man get such a meal even at a much higher price," she said, "and served in such a dainty way and so very appetizing and from such small kitchens."

"I was also impressed with the variety of services which seem to foresee and meet every possible need of men on leave. For instance, at Red Cross Rainbow Corner, there is a sewing service conducted by Mrs. Irene Whittaker. A man may have a blouse mended, a button sewn on or his decorations or "flashes" properly put up in no time. Lots of the men tell Mrs. Whittaker, 'You remind me of my mother'.

"Another very popular service is conducted by Lady Cavendish, better known as Adele Astaire, who writes letters for the men to their families or sweethearts. Adele says there are two things she loves to do, talk and write letters and, as far as I have seen, she is kept busy doing both at Rainbow Corner."

Lady Dill will tell American parents of all the recreational facilities supplied by the clubs in Britain. These range from dances, games, theatricals, outings, sight-seeing, picnics, etc., to personal wishes of an individual.

Lady Dill drove an ambulance for the French Army in the early days of the war. Her unit was nearly captured by the advancing German army and she made her escape by way of Bordeaux. "I served around Vousiers in the Argonne district," said she, "in the very country fought over by the Americans in the last war. The French troops on leave behind the lines had no recreational facilities at all, no Red Cross clubs to look after them. If they had been looked after as the Red Cross is now caring for American soldiers on leave, who knows if their morale might not have been vastly higher and with what results.

Thai Diplomat Becomes Father

Ananta Chintakananda, Secretary of the Thailand Legation, and Mme. Chintakananda have abandoned the custom of their country in calling upon astrological and mystical influence to name their third child, a son, born on September 8. He will be named Anuja. The two other children in the family are girls—Angsana, aged 9, and Anuri, who is 7.

According to ancient ritual, children of Thailand were named by their grandfather who consulted astrological and mystical connections to select an appropriate name. Also in observance of custom each child was ceremoniously presented to his grandparents, who, in turn, made known the name at an elaborate banquet.

Douglas MacArthur 2d, Now Held by Nazis, to Be Promoted

Douglas MacArthur 2d, nephew of Gen. Douglas MacArthur, under detention by the Nazis at Baden Baden, may be cheered somewhat when he receives the news of his promotion in the Foreign Service Office. His name, along with some half-dozen others, has been sent to the Senate by President Roosevelt for confirmation.

Young Douglas MacArthur's career in the Foreign Service began in Italy. He was later transferred to Paris and spent five years at the embassy, following it about when war broke out and the offices were forced to move with the French provisional government. He ended up in Vichy, where he served as Third Secretary.

Mrs. MacArthur, now in Washington, was the last American to leave France, going to Portugal with her baby daughter only when she saw there was no possible chance to remain with her husband. The former "Wa-wee" Barkley. Mrs. MacArthur is the daughter of Senator and Mrs. Alben Barkley.

During Mr. and Mrs. MacArthur's stay in Vichy their two-room apartment at the Hotel Ambassadeur developed into a meeting place for all Americans stranded in the area.

As members of the Diplomatic Corps they were allowed to listen to their radio. That was when General MacArthur was valiantly defending Bataan. Actually it made life even more difficult for when the news was good they felt they must conceal their joy. When it was bad they always knew it from the quiet smiles on the faces of the Japanese in the hotel dining room. The final period of tenseness came before the North African campaign. There was no information whatever from the United States. Finally, Mr. MacArthur insisted that his wife and baby leave and they proceeded to Lisbon by motor and rail.

Purely Personal

Among the returning Senators and Congressman checking in at the Capitol Hotel for the winter are Senator and Mrs. J. L. McClellan and their daughter, who have returned from Arkansas; Senator Thomas Stewart, back from Tennessee; Representative M. J. Kerwin, in from Ohio; Representative A. J. Elliott, here from California, and Representative Thomas Scanlon of Pennsylvania.

Senator Edwin C. Johnson of Colorado and Mrs. Johnson have returned to Washington and will make their home for the winter at the Carroll Arms.

Sir Richard and Lady Fairey arrived yesterday in Quebec at the Seigniory Club.

The Commercial Counselor of the Chilean Embassy and Senora de Campbell have returned from Braddock Heights, Md., where they have been visiting their daughter, Senora Enrique Gacitua, and her baby daughter, Lili Carola Gacitua. Senora Gacitua and her daughter will be here about a month and then will return to New Orleans.

Mrs. McCeney Werlich, who spent the summer at Bar Harbor, Me., has returned to her home on Sixteenth st. for the season.

Edward Weintal will entertain at a cocktail party on Sunday afternoon from 5 to 8 o'clock at his home on Summit pl.

Mrs. Luther Croll has returned from a month's visit in Atlantic City. She has joined her brother, Frederick McKenny, at the family estate, Handley Hall, in Kensington, Md.

There's an Art to Bond Selling— Mrs. R. H. Ewell Knows How

Course of Instruction Given to All Women Working in Committee Booths

When Mrs. Washington goes a-bond buying, she generally wants to know exactly what she is getting for her money.

To see to it that this practical lady receives satisfactory answers to her questions, the Women's Division of the District War Finance Committee has devised a well-founded plan.

Now every woman working in a committee booth is first given a course of instruction in the art of bond selling.

Chief lecturer for the course is Mrs. Raymond H. Ewell, herself an inquisitive citizen who understands Mrs. Washington's attitude.

"Women are not particularly given to emotional bond buying," explains Mrs. Ewell, whose official title is that of chairman of the instruction and promotion division of the War Finance Committee. "We find that most women react more favorably when approached on the basis of the future security of their families."

At classes held weekly in the American Security Building, prospective bond saleswomen learn, for instance, just what kind of bonus will appeal to certain types of people. They are told about the safety devices attached by law to a bond which prevent it from being given away or pledged on a loan.

Mrs. Ewell points out that while each war bond drive thus far has been a success, there always remains about 10 per cent of the citizenry which has failed to respond. "These few are the ones we plot and plan for at the beginning of each new drive," Mrs. Ewell reports, and adds, "Since women control from 70 to 80 per cent of the Nation's spending, we consider it worth while to direct most of our efforts in the direction of Mrs. Washington."

Senora de Danis Making Trip on Exchange Ship

On the high seas, on a trip which is contributing history to these historical times, is Senora de Danis, wife of the Minister-Attache of the Spanish Embassy.

Senora de Danis is accompanying her husband, Spanish delegate aboard the exchange ship, Gripsholm, now on its way with its quota of Japanese repatriates for the Portuguese West Coast of India, where it will pick up American repatriates.

The Gripsholm will stop at Rio de Janeiro and at Montivideo on its outward bound journey and on the return trip will put in at Pont Elizabeth and Rio again. Senor and Senora de Danis expect to be back in Washington about the end of November.

Toys For Refugee Children Sought

You're invited to come to tea and bring a toy Monday afternoon between 3 o'clock and 6, when the British War Relief Society entertains. A toy or a game that will pack easily for shipping is your only admission fee to the party at 1767 Columbia Road.

Assisting Lady Broderick at the tea table will be Mrs. J. H. Magowan, Lady Sansom, Mrs. MacNeece Foster, Mrs. Leslie Bratton and Mrs. Walter Tuckerman. A group of children will also help receive the toys, which will be sent to England for Christmas presents for refugee children housed in BWRS hostels.

Smedley Butler, True to Tradition, In Marine Corps

"Telling it to the Marines" in the fashion of his famous father will be Lieut. Smedley D. Butler, jr., just commissioned an aviation transport pilot. Young Butler, 34, follows in the footsteps of one of the most famous Leathernecks ever to stand by the hardy reputation of the corps.

Washington well remembers the late General Butler, sr., commanding officer at Quantico for many years, who was famous for the example of "esprit de corps" he set, as well as for feuds with Cabinet members, and dabbling in Pennsylvania politics.

Doris Beckwith, Ensign Crans To Wed Saturday

Miss Doris Beckwith, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Lincoln Beckwith, will be married on Saturday to Ensign Robert Russell Crans, US Navy Air Corps, the ceremony to be held at 4:30 o'clock at the Sulgrave Club. The Rev. Armand Eyler, rector of St. Margaret's Church, will officiate and a reception will follow.

Miss Billie Byrd West will be the bride's only attendant and Russell H. Crans will serve as his son's best man. The bridegroom, who received his wings at Pensacola, Fla., on Friday, has arrived in Washington and is with his parents at their home in Chevy Chase.

Miss Beckwith and her fiance will be entertained at a party this evening to be given by Capt. and Mrs. L. B. Clark, and tomorrow afternoon Mrs. Harold Vincent, the former Miss Frances Bowie, will be hostess at a cocktail party for the couple.

Miss Shulman to Wed Dr. Solomon Love

The Rev. and Mrs. Abraham Shulman of Baltimore announce the engagement of their daughter, Esther, to Dr. Solomon Love, son of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Love of Washington.

Dr. Love is engaged in research for the Chemical Warfare Service. Miss Shulman is a student at Goucher College, Maryland.

Mrs. Dorothy Patterson Wed to H. E. Jackson

Howell E. Jackson of Middleburg, Va., and his bride, the former Mrs. Dorothy Foster Patterson, also of Middleburg, have gone to Hot Springs, Va., for a fortnight and when they return will make their home at Oakendale, home of the bridegroom in Middleburg.

The wedding took place on Tuesday at the Presbyterian Church in Warrenton, Va., with the Rev. Thomas Wooten MacLean, rector of the church, officiating.

The bride is the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. John Henry Patterson of Dayton, Ohio. Mr. Patterson was founder of the National Cash Register Co. in Dayton.

Mrs. Jackson purchased her estate, Far Hill Farm, near Middleburg, about eight years ago, but has lived abroad much of the time. She worked with Miss Anne Morgan in France, had her own ambulance unit at the front line when the war broke out, and only returned to this country after the German occupation of France. For her war work she was decorated by the French government in an impressive ceremony at the front. She was the only woman permitted to reach the Maginot Line.

Mr. Jackson formerly lived in Nashville, Tenn., and Darjen, Conn. He built Oakendale about six years ago, after visting in the hunt country several years during the fox-hunting season.

He is the son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Henry S. Jackson of Middle, Tenn., near Nashville. His grandfather, Howell Jackson, for whom he is named, was a Senator from Tennessee and Justice of the United States Supreme Court.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Jackson are horse lovers and came to Virginia to live because of the good fox hunting there.

Members of AWHR Start Classes

The American Women's Hospital Reserve, Washington's newest volunteer hospital corps, organized less than two weeks ago, has already established something of a record for speed. The first class for home nursing, with its quota filled to overflowing, has reported to Walsh House for the course under the tutelage of Mrs. Parker West, authorized Red Cross instructor. Three sessions have already been held and the class will be graduated October 8. Members of the class have elected to give three days a week to study instead of the required two, in order to be available for service at the earliest possible time. Graduates will be certified by the Red Cross, Eastern Division, and will register immediately for duty in hospitals as nurses' assistants.

First to register for instruction was Capt. Dorothy Lee Ward, organizer and director of the corps, followed by Lieut. Louise Atwill, codirector; Sergt. Katharine Edgar Byron, Sergt. Ruth Treglown. Also in the class are Countess Apponyi, Mrs. D. A. Hanes, Mrs. Horace Young, Mrs. Clark Woodward, Mrs. Roger Williams, jr., Mrs. Corinne Paine Phelps, Mrs. Kenneth Watson, Mrs. Natalie Phillips, Mrs. Ethel Gearhart, Mrs. Robert Hopkins, Mrs. C. G. Robinson, Mrs. William Sullivan, Mme. Rybar, Mrs. P. Y. K. Howat, Mrs. A. R. Palek, Mrs Walter H. Wells, Mrs. Robert A. Phillipson, Mrs. Kathleen Bradbury, Mrs. Stanley O'Connor, Mrs. Robert Henderson.

The course in home nursing will be followed immediately by classes in nurses' aid and first aid, the corps' objective being to have a considerable personnel in the three branches in the field by January 1.

Mrs. Kirk Leaves For Long Island

Mrs. Norman T. Kirk, wife of the Surgeon General, left yesterday for New York and the end of the week will go to Montauk, Long Island, to be the guest of her brother, Perry B. Duryea. General Kirk will join his wife in Long Island on Saturday and they will return to the Capital Monday.

The Kirks have had as their house guests this week, in their quarters at Walter Reed, Brig. Gen. and Mrs. J. Edward Bastion. General Bastion is commanding officer at Percy Jones General Hospital.

Judy Thomas to Attend School In New York

Mrs. Charles Thomas has returned from New York, where she went to enter her daughter, Miss Judy Thomas, as a student at Finch Junior College.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas, whose home is in Los Angeles, are in Washington for the duration. Mr. Thomas is working with James V. Forrestal, Undersecretary of the Navy. Before starting out for Kansas City with Mr. Forrestal to open the war bond drive, Mr. Thomas joined his family in New York and with Mrs. Thomas gave a dinner for their daughter before school started.

Capt., Mrs. Tolson Visiting Here

Capt. and Mrs. Bernard R. Tolson, jr., with their daughter, Florence Clayton Tolson, are the house guests of Captain Tolson's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Bernard R. Tolson.

Captain Tolson, who has been on duty at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, for the past two years, will go to Quantico, Va., on Monday for duty. Mrs. Tolson has been making her home with her parents, Col. and Mrs. J. A. Rossell, in Portsmouth, N. H., where Colonel Rossell is commanding officer of the United States Naval Prison.

Mrs. Carlson Wins WAC Commission At Des Moines

Proud of her brand-new gold bars is Second Lieut. Maggie Ingeborg Carlson, who recently was graduated from the Officer Candidate School at Des Moines, Iowa.

Former State Department Worker Carlson had a first-hand glimpse of the war when she worked with the United States Foreign Service in assisting to repatriate American refugees from northern Europe in 1939 and 1940. During the German invasion in 1941, she remained in Denmark until the consulate was closed.

Making it an all-service family is her son, Pvt. Theodore Carlson, who enlisted in the Army when his mother joined the WACS last October. He is now stationed at the Army War College at New York University for instruction under the Army specialized training program.

MISS KATHLEEN COURTNEY O'HEARN

whose engagement to Officer Candidate Douglas Jules Titus, is announced by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Matthew Charles O'Hearn. The prospective bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Hill Titus, and is now in the Officers' Candidate School of the Army Air Corps at Miami Beach. Miss O'Hearn attended schools in the Canal Zone and New Orleans.

Bette Howard Becomes Bride Of Darrell Smith

A Marine Corps bride is the former Miss Bette Howard, daughter of Mrs. Gregg Howard of Gainesville, Tex., whose wedding to Pfc. Darrell Smith, son of V. E. Smith of Pampa, Tex., took place Saturday evening in the chapel of the National Baptist Memorial Church. The Rev. A. Lincoln Smith officiated at the ceremony.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her uncle, H. Bailey Cole of Arlington, Va., wore a tailored gray suit, black accessories and a corsage of orchids and lilies of the valley. Miss Wanda Ruth Franks, the maid of honor, wore a corsage of pink rosebuds on her royal blue suit. Corpl. Don Risser of Fort Belvoir, Va., served as best man.

Following the ceremony, a reception was held at the Mintwood pl. home of Mrs. Mary Franks. Private Smith is stationed at Parris Island, N. C. He attended the University of Minnesota and was employed in the War Department before enlisting in the Marine Corps. His bride is an employe of the War Department.

Lilla Raymond To Be Fall Bride

Mr. and Mrs. Carl L. Raymond of Forest Glen, Md., announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Lilla B. Raymond, to Martin L. Doehling, USNR, son of Mr. and Mrs. John P. Doehling of Allendale, N. J.

The prospective bridegroom is at present stationed at the School of Dentistry, Georgetown University. The wedding will take place early in October.

Wilson Comptons Have Family Reunion at Farm

Reunions during wartime are few and far between. One of the few is that of Mr. and Mrs. Wilson Compton, who have had their whole family with them for the first time in two years.

Their farm, Seneca-on-the-Potomac near Herndon, Va., has been the scene of the two-week get-together. Lieut. Wilson Compton, jr., has come home from two years at Pearl Harbor and on Pacific sea duty. Catherine arrived back from a summer spent in Mexico City in time to greet her brother. She and Miss Jean Wallace, daughter of Vice President and Mrs. Henry A. Wallace, attended summer school at the University of Mexico. Catherine has now gone back to Wooster College in Ohio to finish her last semester there.

The third member of the family, Ross, took time off from his studies at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology to join the family. He is in the V-12 program of the Navy. Helen, the youngest daughter, after spending the summer at home, has left for Winston-Salem, N. C., where she has enrolled in her second year at the Salem Academy.

Helen Clark Wed in North Carolina Home

To enter the United States Navy Chaplain's School in October is George Denning Jackson, whose marriage to Miss Helen Purdie Clark, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jerome Bayard Clark of Fayetteville, N. C., and Washington, took place recently in Fayetteville. Mr. Jackson is the son of Mr. and Mrs. John William Jackson of Memphis, Tenn. The Rev. W. Ted Jones officiated.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore an imported gown of white lace and net, a cap of lace holding her veil of illusion. Her bouquet was of stephanotis centered with white orchids.

Mrs. Julian Browne Hutaff, sister of the bride, wore a gown of shell pink net and carried an arm bouquet of pink gardenias. Richard Rhea Gammon was best man. Ushers were Heman Robinson Clark, Robert Murphy-Williams, jr., Samuel W. Dobbyns and Julian Browne Hutaff.

The bride attended Peace Junior College and was graduated from Converse College. She made her debut in 1938 at the North Carolina Debutante Ball. The bridegroom is a graduate of Southwestern University, where he was president of Kappa Sigma and of ODK leadership fraternity. He was recently graduated from the Union Theological Seminary in Richmond.

Washingtonians at Virginia Spa

Arrivals at The Homestead in Hot Springs, Va., from Washington include Lieut. and Mrs. Richard H. Hinckley, Mrs. Donald E. Huss, Lieut. Col. A. E. Davis, Ensign Philip N. Sharples, Capt. Hugh Kaul, Capt. Paul O. Hoffman and Mr. and Mrs. Robert H. Hicks of Washington.

Military Training for Women Praised by WAVE Lieut. Shelly

Mary Jo Shelly Is One of 35 Senior Grade Lieutenants in Women's Naval Reserve

By Peggy Preston

"It is, in effect, a course in character training."

Lieut. Mary Jo Shelly, USNR, whose job concerns the training program for an eventual 91,000 WAVES, gives this asset top billing on her list of enthusiasms for the educational process being offered women in the military services.

So strong is her belief in some of the effects of the "military way" that this former educator foresees applications of the theory into civilian educational circles when she doffs her Navy blues.

"In civilian life we educate young people and let it go at that," explains the lieutenant, who has sea-going blue eyes that match the stripes on her sleeve. "In the Navy we train them, then see to it that they use what they have learned for the benefit of others. It's an example of a perfect 'follow through' and I'd like to see colleges and universities take more responsibility for seeing that education is really used as it is in the Navy."

One of the 35 senior grade women lieutenants in the Naval Reserve, Mary Jo Shelly holds the post of Special Assistant to the Director of Special Activities, Bureau of Naval Personnel. With characteristic clarity, she describes her work as that of "helping to meet the needs of the Navy right on the dot."

She was one of the pioneer WAVE officers and entered Northampton with the first contingent of volunteers. After only two weeks there, she came to her present assignment in Washington. "I was sort of railroaded through," reflects the lieutenant.

The day before Lieutenant Shelly entered the WAVES she was still holding down the job of assistant to the president of Bennington College in Vermont, from which she is now on leave. Prior to that she did administrative work at the University of Chicago, but in her own words was "never quite a dean of women."

A Michigander by birth, the forthright lieutenant claims to be a New Englander by adoption. She is a graduate of the University of Oregon and did her graduate work at Columbia.

From her vantage point in the Navy Annex in Arlington, she has watched the Women's Naval Reserve grow day by day during the past year, and she likes what she has seen. "I think we've won our place in this man's Navy, and won it by being really useful," she avers.

Roberts-Adams Betrothal Told

Mr. and Mrs. Tobias L. Roberts of Bar Harbor, Me., announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Mary Whittington Roberts, to Howard Crouse Adams of Washington, son of Mrs. Katherine O. Adams of New York.

Miss Roberts was graduated from Dana Hall and the Wheelock School and attended Boston and New York Universities. Last year she was on the faculty of the Spence School.

The prospective bridegroom is with the Office of the Quartermaster General in the War Department. He is a graduate of Hotchkiss School and Yale University.

Judge, Mrs. Goodwin Give Dinner

Judge and Mrs. Clarence Norton Goodwin entertained informally at dinner last evening for Miss Lucy Martin, an old friend from Chicago. Later the group attended the performance of "Dark Eyes" at the National and went backstage to greet the star of the play, Elena Miramova, whom Mrs. Goodwin met this summer at Blue Ridge Summit, where she was for several weeks.

And Nothing Can Be Done About It

HERE'S A GOOD SCOTCH STORY—A CERTAIN LAIRD OF THE MANOR HAD AN OLD SERVANT WHOM HE ALLOWED MANY LIBERTIES. ONE DAY THE LAIRD NOTICED DONALD-
WRITING IN A NOTE BOOK. "WHAT HAVE YOU THERE, DONALD?" HE INQUIRED. "IH MAKIN' A LIST OF THE BIGGEST FOOLS I KNOW," WAS THE REPLY. "OH: AND IS MY NAME ON THE LIST?"
"AYE, THAT 'TIS." "COME, COME, DONALD! WHY?" "WEEL, YE SENT ANGUS DOON TO LUNNON TO BUY HORSES FOR YE, AN' GAVE HIM 5000 POUND; AN' YE TOOK NO RECEIPT."
"BUT I KNOW ANGUS WELL: I NEED NO RECEIPT FROM HIM: HE'LL BE BACK."
"WEEL—IF HE DOES COME BACK I'LL SCRATCH YER NAME OFF—AN' WRITE HIS IN ITS PLACE"
WELL, DID ANGUS COME BACK?

TERRY AND THE PIRATES — Wing Back — By Milton Caniff

HOW DO THE AMERICAN INSTRUCTORS AND A CADET SUCH AS TERRY LEE TALK TO THE CHINESE STUDENTS WHO KNOW NO ENGLISH WHILE THEY'RE FLYING?
IT'S NOT TOO DIFFICULT, MISS MURAMUR...
EITHER ONE OF THE BILINGUAL STUDENTS TRANSLATES THE ORDER --OR THE FLIGHT LEADER USES SIGNALS -- A TAIL WIGGLE MEANS "GO FROM V TO STRING"--OR "STRING TO V"....WOBBLING WINGS MEANS "BUILD UP TO LARGER FORMATION"... AND SO ON...
OR THEY USE FOOTBALL SIGNALS BY RADIO -- WHICH THE CHINESE LEARN VERY QUICKLY
I SUPPOSE JOE CABOOSE HAS FALLEN BACK TO FUNT...

MARY WORTH'S FAMILY — By Dale Allen

YOU'RE OUTA MY DEPTH, WAXEY! GIMME A FILL-IN! WHY ARE WE HEADIN' FOR NEW YORK?
BECAUSE, NUMBO, MY OBTUSE COLLEAGUE, THAT IS WHERE WE'LL FIND THE AGENCY WHICH PRODUCED THESE "QUEEN'S TASTE" COSMETIC ADS!
THEY CAN PUT US IN TOUCH WITH THE MODEL WHO SO STARTLINGLY RESEMBLES A CERTAIN KIDNAPED HEIRESS, THE LATE PAMELA BRYCE!
WE SHALL HIRE SAID MODEL AND MAKE CONTACT ONCE AGAIN WITH MR. MADISON BRYCE..!
I DIG YA NOW, WAXEY! THE OLD BOY GETS A GANDER AT WHAT HE THINKS IS HIS HIS LONG-LOST KID, AN' SHELLS OUT THE DOUGH SHE CHEATED US OUT OF BY CROAKIN', HUH?
CRUDELY PUT, BUT QUITE ACCURATE, NUMBO!

MICKEY FINN — A Bird's-Eye View — By Frank Leonard

IT LOOKS LIKE ONE OF THOSE FISHING BOATS WE SAW IN THE HARBOR AT PUERTO LABELLA!
YES! AND IT MUST BE HEADING FOR A COVE OR A RIVER JUST AHEAD OF US!
GOSH—THAT'S RIGHT, WHOEVER IS SAILIN' IT, CERTAINLY WOULDN'T BE HEADING FOR THE BEACH—WITH THAT SURF ROLLING IN!
GIVE ME THE GLASSES, TOM! I'M CLIMBING UP ONE OF THESE TREES!
HOT DOG! MAYBE WE'VE HIT THE JACKPOT AGAIN!

A KNIFE!

43,000 Here Helped With Tax Returns

Last midnight was the deadline for filing income tax reports and up to that hour, when the free assistance bureau of the Internal Revenue Bureau at 12th st. and Constitution ave. nw. closed, an estimated 43,000 had availed themselves of the service there. Some 180,000 persons were believed to have filed returns by mail and in person.

Business fell off so much yesterday afternoon that half of 200 clerks, who have been busy most of the time since the bureau opened August 5, were sent home.

Outside the bureau yesterday an entrepreneur distributed cards reading: "Income Tax Returns Prepared. Day-Nite. No waiting." A United States mail truck clattered up to the mailroom, to discharge heavy bundles of returns.

"They'll be coming in right up to the midnight deadline," William E. Heath, mail chief, said. "Lots of special deliveries, too. Just like every year."

Those who should have filed and failed now face a 10 per cent delinquency penalty.

Rep. Randolph to Introduce Three District Bills Tomorrow

Chairman Randolph of the House District Committee announced yesterday that he will introduce three bills into the House tomorrow, all recommended by the District Commisioners.

One provides for the revision of a law approved in 1926 concerning home care for dependent children in the District, which for some time has been termed "wholly inadequate" by the Social Security Board.

The bill, which amends the act to meet Federal requirements, was drafted by the Board of Public Welfare. It provides one procedure instead of two to deal with cases where aid to dependent children is involved; defines eligibility in terms of social security legislation, through which Federal matched payments are obtained; permits inclusion in the grant of incapacitated fathers who live with their families; permits aid to 16 and 17-year-olds, and removes from the standing committee of the Board of Public Welfare the necessity for reviewing each case.

The second bill provides for payments covering maintenance of feeble-minded persons at the District Training School at Laurel, Md., in cases where the patient acquires property after he has been admitted to the school as a public charge, or where a relative dies leaving an estate and there has been no court order requiring payment of maintenance.

The remaining Randolph bill is identical with one reported favorably yesterday by the Senate District Committee, permitting that liquor licenses be granted to clubs established for officers of the United Nations.

Tribute Is Paid Airmen, Gunners Who Saved Britain

London, Sept. 15 (AP).—The memory of "the few to whom" as Prime Minister Churchill said, "so many owe so much," was honored by this nation today on the third anniversary of the RAF's greatest victory in the battle of Britain.

With an emotion akin to reverence, Britons recalled how, on September 15, 1940, British airmen and antiaircraft gunners brought down 185 German planes in furious aerial fighting that began at dawn and lasted until twilight settled over the hills of Kent and Sussex.

At an anniversary gathering of veterans of the battle of Britain Air Chief Marshal Lord Dowding paid tribute to the 11 RAF fliers who were killed that day and to their mates.
